Federal Workers Assured Full Pay April 1 by House

President's Approval of Bill to Restore Cuts Held Certain.

Due to Receive Measure Today

Action of Lower Body Wins Applause of Luther Steward.

By James D. Secrest.

Payment of $22,500,000 additional to Government employes, enlisted men and Federal pensioners between April 1 and July 1 was assured yesterday when the House sustained the Senate pay restoration compromise.

Only a few legislative maneuvers and the President's signature—now confidently expected—are necessary before the amendment becomes a law, and the depression salary cuts become history.

Elimination of the last 5 per cent pay cut three months earlier than anticipated will mean $15 to $25 extra for most Government employes; to members of Congress it will mean $125.

The House acted almost as quickly as the Senate in approving the pay amendment after upsetting the plan of Chairman Buchanan, of the House Appropriations Committee, to send the amendment to conference without instructions.

Motion of Mead.

Upon motion of Representative Mead, of New York, chairman of the Post Office Committee, the House conferees were instructed to concur in the Senate amendment. Previously, Minority Leader Snell had demanded that the House be given an opportunity to settle the matter immediately without awaiting a conference report.

The conferees will meet at 2 p. m. today to iron out their differences on other minor amendments to the urgent supplemental appropriations bill, among them an addition of $4,000 for the District-Virginia Boundary Commission.

Unless other business prevents, the conference reports will be accepted by both chambers later in the afternoon, and the bill will be sent to the White House for the President's signature.

Jubilant over the Government employes' victory, which he had brought about, Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, announced that he would seek to abolish the promotional ban and the restrictions on allocations as of April 1 at the first opportunity.

McCarran's Proposal.

He said he might have the bill tacked on the public works measure as an amendment when it is considered in the Senate.

The House vote, like that in the Senate, was not recorded, but it was apparent that the Administration had passed the word along to

'Fuel of Future' Hikes Air Speed

Army Claims Increase of 30 M. P. H. by Use of New Petroleum.

New York, Jan. 30 (AP).—A secret new motor fuel developed by the Army Air Corps, adding 30 miles an hour to plane speeds, was described for the first time today at the annual meeting of the Institute of Aeronautical Sciences.

The new fuel is "100-octane," which engineers have been calling the "fuel of the future." The Air Corps has had it for six months and it has lived up to the "dreams" which a short while ago were considered daring, if not fantastic.

The fuel was described by Lieut. E. D. Klein, of the Air Corps. The name "100-octane" means the anti-knock rating.

The gasolines available to the public and to commercial aviation at present run up to only "87-octane." Lieut. Klein said that a few months ago the Air Corps obtained 1,000 gallons of "iso-octane."

This is a liquid from petroleum, much like gasoline, but of higher test. Technically it is called a "pentane." The Air Corps experts mixed this "iso-octane" with 1,000 gallons of four standard motor gasolines.

As a result they had 2,000 gallons of "100-octane" for experiment. They tried it in 10 pursuit planes, called "P-26A'S," in the Mitchel Trophy Race at Selfridge Field last November.

These planes flew a 5-mile circular course. With the "100-octane" they made a top speed of 216.8 miles an hour. This was an increase of about 35 miles an hour for the same type planes flying a similar course. On straightaways, Lieut. Klein said, these pursuit planes made still higher speeds with the "100-octane."

The new fuels were tried in cyclone and in wasp engines. In all cases they developed higher power. To date in general the tests have not shown definitely what if any changes will be made in engines when this "fuel of the future" comes into regular use.

Offers Carrier Program

Congress Gets Plan to Unify U. S. Carriers

Eastman Asks Bigger I.C.C., Wider Power; Tate Scores Report.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Strict regulation of all forms of transportation, including foreign shipping, by a reorganized and enlarged Interstate Commerce Commission, was proposed to Congress and to President Roosevelt yesterday by Joseph B. Eastman, the Federal Coordinator of Transportation.

In a bulky report calling for legislation at this session, he set forth a sweeping plan for thus unifying under one agency control over the Nation's carriers—on land, on sea, and in the air. Action on the report will be held up in Congress until expected messages of approval are received from the White House.

Mr. Roosevelt will begin these messages today, when he transmits the report of the Federal Aviation Commission. Other reports are to follow, in rapid order, until the Administration's program takes complete shape. This program, in general, is expected to follow the lines laid down in the Eastman report.

U. S. Ownership Rejected.

Although the soft-spoken coordinator again toys with the idea of Government ownership of the railroads, he rejects it as too costly for the persent. He proposes, instead, a continuance of present policies of coordination and the extension of the Interstate Commerce Commission to take in the railroads' competitors.

Adhering closely to his recommendations of last year, regarding Federal regulation of buses, trucks and waterways in interstate commerce, the coordinator goes a step farther by including foreign shipping and "wharfingers" (port terminals). Other points in the Eastman proposal:

(1) Enlargement of the present I. C. C. from 11 members to 16, and its division into a finance division of 3, a railroad division of 5, a water and pipeline diyision of 3, and a motor carrier and air division of 3. Heads of these divisions, together with the chairman of the commission, would form a control board of 5.

(2) Continuance of the office of Coordinator of Transportation, with power to force consolidations, to

Peoples Idea For Gas Sale Stirs Storm

Socialism Charge Made; Spokesman Sent to Get More Facts.

By Robert C. Albright.

A storm of protest against "Government in business" proposals of Rear Admiral Christian J. Peoples yesterday broke on the head of the Treasury procurement chief, as a Senate committee sent the Administration witness back to the Treasury for more estimates to back up the President's $4,880,000,000 works and relief program.

Senate demand for a "factual" program, and rumblings of Democratic dissatisfaction with supporting testimony, gathered force even while Congress made financing of the huge project possible by broadening Treasury authority to issue new bonds. Without a record vote, the Senate passed a House bill permitting issuance of $11,525,052,350 in additional securities. Inflationists seized the opportunity to launch an expansion assault.

Both Republican and Democratic Senators expressed amazement at proposals by Peoples to "liquidate" works and relief billions under a program indefinitely calling for everything from real estate sales and highway concessions to rural housing rentals. Democrats frankly voiced concern at the trend of testimony, but, embarrassed by Republican moves to make a partisan issue out of the bill, refrained from open criticism.

Suggesting to the committee Tuesday that the Government "sell gasoline," Peoples denied yesterday that it intends to "enter the gasoline business." He proposed instead that the Government derive road revenues from "concessions" along its routes.

Gasoline Agency Seen.

"Senator O'Mahoney—Admiral, you expect to sell gasoline on these highways?

"Admiral Peoples—Yes.

"Senator O'Mahoney—Is that contemplated, that you should derive any revenue from that?

"Senator O'Mahoney—By whom?

"Admiral Peoples—They would have to get up some kind of an agency to handle it.

"Senator O'Mahoney—Would it be sold by the Government?

Competition Admitted.

"Admiral Peoples—By the Govern't; yes, sir.

"Senator O'Mahoney—The Government then would enter into competition on this highway with private concerns now engaged in the retail sale of gasoline?

"Admiral Peoples—No, sir, because the retail distributors would not be located on the highway. They would get their gasoline before they went on the highway; yes, sir; but it could be handled by the sale of gasoline or tax upon gasoline, either.

"Senator Truman—Yet the gasoline would be sold in competition with private stations.

"Admiral Peoples—There is another angle to it in connection with the rural projects, the highway could, in connection with the establishment of highways, serve real estate which could be bought for the purpose of building homes along certain sections of the highway and these homes could be rented or sold to the individuals."

Peoples told the committee he figured that not only would highway outlays from the fund be self-liquidating, but that 100 per cent of the Government's investment in subsistence homesteads, rural housing and rural electrification, would be returned.

Grade Crossing Guards Proposed.

He estimated that rural electrification would cost $750 a mile, and an average of three or four customers a mile would liquidate the cost. Rural housing, he insisted, would pay for itself through rentals over a period of approximately 35 years.

The Treasury procurement chief, who is expected to play a prominent role in the proposed works set-

Red Congress Hails Increase Of Its Armies

'Let Our Enemies Try to Cross Our Borders,' Leader Warns.

Moscow, Jan. 30 (AP).—A roar of applause went up from 2,500 Communist throats tonight as the vice-commissar for defense told the seventh all-union congress of Soviets that the last four years have seen the red army grow from 600,000 to 940,000 men.

"War is being intensively prepared agianst us," Mikhail Tuchacheffsky, the vice-commissar, told the delegates gathered from all the vast stretches of the Soviet Union to review bolshevist progress since the sixth congress in 1931.

"But let our enemies try our borders," he added defiantly, "and the strength of our army under the command of Voroshiloff (Klement Voroshiloff, commissar for defense)."

At this the whole vast throng sprang to its feet, and the great hall of columns of the Kremlin

Bill to Offset World Court's Veto Offered

As Administration leaders attempted to appraise the results of their defeat by the Senate over adherence to the World Court, Representative David J. Lewis (Democrat), of Maryland, yesterday proposed that this Government become a party to the international tribunal through adoption by a majority vote of both houses of Congress of a bill to that effect.

Mr. Lewis, contending that precedents existed for the course of action proposed by him, introduced a bill in the House which would "authorize and empower" the President to ratify on behalf of this country the World Court protocols and authorize appropriations for the payment of the United States' proportionate share of the expenses of the court.

The bill requires the President in depositing the ratification of the United States to state in writing that his action was taken "subject to the understanding that it involves no legal relation on the part of the United States with the League of Nations."

Scope of Lewis Bill.

The Lewis bill would go beyond the resolution of ratification rejected Tuesday by the Senate when two-thirds failed to vote for it. Under the bill the President would be authorized to ratify the World Court optional clause accepting compulsory jurisdiction of the court in disputes relating to treaty interpretation, international law, the existence of facts constituting a breach of international law and the nature and extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of international obligations.

Mr. Lewis pointed out that 48 nations had accepted compulsory jurisdiction of the court in these types of disputes. He added this opened a way for this country to obtain an adjudication for the war debts due here.

The resolution which failed of ratification by the Senate specifically provided that the United States did not agree to nor accept the optional clause for compulsory jurisdiction of the court.

The Marylander said he would make every effort to get action on his bill by the House Foreign Af-

New Dealists Are Drafting States' Bills

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Not only is the Roosevelt Administration drafting the legislation it wishes Congress to pass, but, it was revealed yesterday, it also is writing bills making far-reaching changes in the economic structure of the country for the State Legislatures to approve.

The legal staff of the PWA has forwarded bills revising State laws to the Governors of nine Commonwealths, completing drafts of bills for two States yesterday, and is at work on similar bills for 29 other States with Legislatures in session.

The State Governors have turned to the legal experts of the Federal Government to draft their legislation for them at the suggestion of President Roosevelt, who pointed out that in such a way the municipalities of each State would be enabled to "take advantage" of the $4,880,000,000 works program now pending before Congress.

President's Suggestion.

The President sent his suggestion to the Governors of all the States. With the bait of a slice of the huge public works fund dangling before their eyes, they quickly responded, asking that Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes send them whatever draft legislation is thought necessary to make their States and municipalities eligible for the Federal money.

Since the New Deal was inaugurated the State Governors on several occasions have been asked by Federal authorities to bring their State laws on certain subjects in harmony with the acts of Congress, notably in the matter of the NRA and antitrust laws and in the matter of the housing administration.

But so far as is known this is the first time that bills applicable to the Constitutions and systems of each State have been written by Federal officers for State Legislatures to pass. Aside from suggesting that such a course might be essential if States are to get any funds from the works appropriation, the Federal Government has not sought to dictate to the State authorities.

Governors Appear Willing.

But the Governors of the States appear to be willing to comply with whatever the Roosevelt Administration wishes. In some cases it has been indicated that the Governors plan to force adoption of the bills drafted by the Federal Government without change.

Thus Gov. Bibb Graves, of Alabama, in forwarding the Federally drafted bills to his Legislature, stated they had his unqualified support. He also pointed out that adoption of these bills would open the way to Alabama obtaining approximately $80,000,000 of the Federal fund for new enterprises.

PWA attaches said this figure was "a pure estimate" on the part of the Governor since no attempt has been made to allocate the new works fund—not yet appropriated—among the States.

Gov. Harry W. Nice, of Maryland, not only said he would be "delighted" to have bills prepared for his State, but suggested that they be submitted by Secretary Ickes directly to the presiding officers of the Legislature, explaining "such action would strengthen very much any position assumed by me in this important matter."

Altogether, 39 State governors have asked the Federal Government to write bills for them. Thus, it is pointed out in some quarters, the

Six Paintings in Famed Gallery Of Morgan Sold for $1,500,000

Edsel Ford Reported to Have Paid $500,000 for Ghirlandaio Portrait, Prize of the Collection; Metropolitan Obtains Two.

New York, Jan. 30 (AP).—Within a few weeks after they were put on the market, six paintings from the collection of J. P. Morgan have been sold for approximately $1,500,000, it was disclosed today.

Two of the paintings were acquired by the Metropolitan Museum of Art and four by private collectors whose identity was kept secret.

It was authoritatively reported in art circles, however, that Edsel Ford, son of the automobile magnate, had purchased what was described as the cream of the Morgan collection—"Portrait of Giovanna Tournabunoi," by Ghirlandaio—for "less than $500,000."

Charles R. Henschel, president of the Knoedler Gallery, which handled the pictures, said the purchaser of the Ghirlandaio painting had sent an airplane 1,300 miles for a reproduction of the same picture, because another purchaser was after it at the same time.

"That is the most important picture in Mr. Morgan's entire collection, bar none," Henschel asserted.

The two paintings brought by the Metropolitan were "St. Lawrence Enthroned," by Fra Filippo Lippi, and "Anne of Austria," by Peter Paul Rubens. The four which went to private collectors were the Ghirlandaio, "Miss Farren," by Sir Thomas Lawrence, "Mevrow Bodolphe" and "Meheer Bodolphe," by Frans Hals.

Henschel said the two Hals portraits went to a collector not far from New York, the Ghirlandaio traveled some distance, and the Lawrence painting was bought by a New York collector. He added that Andrew Mellon, former Secretary of the Treasury and a noted art collector, had not purchased any of the six.

Buyers of expensive paintings, Henschel disclosed, are tending to keep their purchases secret "so they won't be deluged with all sorts of requests for charity."

Morgan disclosed several days ago that he was offering a few of his prized paintings for sale because there was a good market and he wished to make his estate easier to handle. He intimated he might sell more.

Two Witnesses Accuse 'Fixer' On Ship Deals

$250,000 Fee Was Asked to Obtain Contracts, Inquiry Is Told.

(Associated Press.)

A slim, dark-eyed woman secretary and a disappointed shipbuilding contractor yesterday accused major shipbuilding companies of collusion in naval construction bids, but left the Senate Munitions Committee the task of identifying a "fixer" claiming power to get naval contracts.

In an effort to find him, the committee announced it would question today Alex B. Gravem, Washington attorney, who allegedly outlined the under-cover plans for getting naval construction jobs. The "fixer" was described to the committee as the "most influential civilian" in Washington and a person who could get the contracts for a "consideration."

Tells of "Fixer" Offer.

Testifying yesterday were Laurence R. Wilder, chairman of the board of Gulf Industries of Pensacola, a building company, and Miss Judy Kitchen, his secretary.

Green clad and quiet voiced, Miss Kitchen told of a night conference

Mention of Prisoner's Mother Causes Him to Weep.

Carlstrom Called Possible Perjurer

(Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.)

Hunterdon County Courthouse, Flemington, N. J., Jan. 30.—On the night the news that Charles A. Lindbergh, jr. had been kidnaped went howling down the March wind, Bruno Richard Hauptmann was far away—in a cozy bakery—with a laugh on his lips.

That is what two witnesses for the defense swore today.

It must have been somebody else who laid a ladder against the wall of the Lindbergh home and carried the child from its crib, said Anna Schoeffler Hauptmann. For at 9:30 p. m., March 1, 1932, she swore, her husband led her from the bakery, where she worked, and took her home. It was about that time of night when Col. Charles A. Lindbergh raced up the stairs of his home, saw an empty cradle and turned to his wife and said:

"Anne, they have stolen our baby."

Carlstrom Bolsters Alibi.

Yes, it was somebody else who committed this crime, said Elvert Carlstrom. For March 1 was his birthday and he remembers well how he went into Christian Fredericksen's bakery in New York City. There, he said, sat Bruno Richard Hauptmann, reading a newspaper and laughing at him. He had never seen Hauptmann before, he testified, and did not see him again until he came to the witness chair today to take an oath.

The State will check his testimony with a view to ascertaining if perjury was committed, Special Prosecutor George K. Large said tonight. Large indicated that several allegedly apparent discrepancies would be checked through a transcript of the testimony to determine if anything the witness said on cross-examination was in conflict with statements he made on direct examination. Action might be taken if so, he said.

Thus did Edward J. Reilly, Brooklyn homicide lawyer, build up his contention that Hauptmann never was near the scene of the crime, that he did not kidnap the Lindbergh baby, and that his only connection with the case was a swirl of strange events that put him in possession of $14,600 of the $50,000 ransom that Lindbergh paid as a price for the life and safety of a dead boy.

Hauptmann Sheds Tears.

Hauptmann chose this day—when his own ordeal on the witness stand ended—to display his first quiver of tender sentiment. They dismissed him from the witness chair in midmorning and called his wife. She went up there in her shapeless blue dress, her black hat, beige stockings and black pumps to try to save her husband from death.

It was not talk about babies—alive or dead—that pumped the tears into Hauptmann's eyes. It was testimony about his mother — a wrinkled old lady, well past her allotted lifetime of three-score-and-ten—who lives in Kamenz, Germany, and hopes for the best.

"Why did you take a trip to Europe?" Reilly asked Mrs. Hauptmann.

"I wanted to see my husband's mother, for one thing," came the reply. "She was 70 years old."

"And how!" came the trooper's whispered answer.

There have been charges made here that the Hauptmanns have been coached to weep and to shout "Liar!" at witnesses. Whether this was an act is a secret locked in

Labor Brands NRA 'Failure;' Changes Urged in Auto Code

Proposal of Research Unit Would Adjust Industry's Hours.

By Felix Bruner.

In fervid, fighting language, organized labor yesterday told the National Industrial Recovery Board that NRA had failed in its purpose and that workers have little, if any, hope for future relief in that quarter.

Turning loose on the Administration their two biggest guns—William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America—the labor unions left no doubt of their stand. They are turning to Congress and the proposed 30-hour week as an alternative.

The occasion was the opening of the hearing on labor provisions in codes, called by the Recovery Board. The first day's session opened with a statement, read calmly by Green in which he declared that the "recovery program has not fulfilled what labor considered its two primary purposes—a reduction in

Recommendations that would, in effect, revolutionize the automobile business have been made by the NRA Research and Planning Division and forwarded to President Roosevelt by the Recovery Board.

The proposal, among other things, recommends that new models be produced in the fall, probably in October, instead of in midwinter, as at present. The purpose of the entire plan is to spread employment over as long a period as possible and iron out the production peaks, which have been a problem both to the industry and to labor.

The recommendations are expected to be made a basis for renewal, in revised form, of the automobile code, which expires at midnight tonight. It is possible that the President will extend the present code for a limited period until the new plan can be put into effect, rather than to order changes immediately. It is doubtful whether

Japan Routs Border Mongols; Fears Grave Clash With Soviet

Tokyo, Jan. 30 (AP).—A warning before the Japanese House of Representatives today that disputes along the Manchukuan-Siberian border "may cause serious trouble" at any time was underscored tonight with reports of new fighting along the Manchukuo-Outer Mongolian frontier.

Rengo (Japanese) News Agency, in dispatches from Hsinking, Manchukuo, said Japanese-Manchukuan troops yesterday occupied Kalkha Miao on the Manchu-Mongol frontier, driving Mongols before them.

(The new clash along the northwest frontier of Manchukuo, nominally independent but Japanese-advised empire, was regarded as significant in the light of Japanese contentions that Soviet penetration into outer Mongolia has resulted in virtual communization of that vast territory.)

Japan's warlords pointed again to the Soviet "menace" to Manchukuo to explain to the house of representatives, considering the biggest war budget in Japan's history, why the empire can expect no lightening of the load of military expenditures.

Mineo Osumi, minister of navy, and Gen. Senjuro Hayashi, minister of war, indicated the 1935-36 army and navy budgets, approximately $297,000,000, or half the national revenues, must be continued or even increased.

Hayashi, asserting the Soviet's

Another to Try 2 'Joy Riders' As Judge Bentley Steps Aside

Arthur Penn and William Fanning, 18, will be tried before Municipal Court Judge Mary O'Toole February 13, it was decided yesterday after Judge Fay L. Bentley of the Juvenile Court withdrew as trial judge.

The boys were scheduled to have gone to trial yesterday before Judge Bentley. However, when their mothers joined in filing an "affidavit of prejudice," charging her with being biased against the boys, Judge Bentley announced her withdrawal in favor of Judge O'Toole, who has jurisdiction to try Juvenile Court cases by virtue of a commission from the District Supreme Court.

Penn and Fanning were sentenced to the National Training School for Boys until they are 21, when they admitted to Judge Bentley they had taken an automobile and driven it to Roanoke, Va.

They were released from the institution and allowed a new trial when Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman agreed with Ralph Cusick, attorney for the boys, that their best interest would be served by permitting them a full trial.

The boys, it was shown, first were called before Judge Bentley, who asked them if they had taken the automobile. When they admitted they had, she ordered them sent to the reform school. It was Mr. Cusick's contention that they were not acquainted with their rights and that they should have been represented by a lawyer.

Townsend Plan Will Face Fire Of Morgenthau

(Associated Press.)

Congressional action on the social security bill was accelerated yesterday coincidentally with the declaration by Secretary Perkins that the measure should be law by mid-February to give Legislatures a chance to enact synchronize State laws.

At the same time a move quietly began at the Capitol to provide arguments for members who are besieged by Townsend pension plan demands, but who desire to vote for the Administration's social security measure.

This strategy contemplates having Secretary Morgenthau follow, with fiscal arguments, the appearance before the committee of Dr. F. E. Townsend, who is to be invited before both the House Committee and the Senate Finance Committee.

The House Ways and Means Committee, Chairman Doughton (Democrat), of North Carolina, said, agreed in executive session to "expedite the bill without depriving anybody of a chance to be heard." He said the hearings would close "the middle of next week."

20 Witnesses Heard.

In its drive to expedite the legislation, the committee yesterday heard 20 witnesses in less than three hours. All testified on Federal aid for mothers.

Speaking of the House Committee's decision to call Townsend, Doughton said:

"He has as much of a right to appear as anybody," adding that the committee intended to hear all who had made applications to testify, including C. A. Hathaway, of New York, representing the Communist Party.

Doughton said that since Secretary Morgenthau had postponed his appearance on the Administration's bill, he probably would be heard after Townsend and "probably will want to discuss the practical, financial aspects" of the Townsend plan.

Wants One Bill.

A number of Ways and Means Committee members have been worried because of the many appeals they receive daily asking them to support the Townsend bill.

Secretary Perkins, at a press conference, said many State Legislatures would adjourn by the middle of March and not meet again for nearly two years and that Congress should act swiftly on the security program.

She also expressed belief that the various provisions of the Administration bill should not be split into four different measures, as has been suggested in some quarters at the Capitol.

Janitor Is Dead At Post of Duty, Tending Furnace

Proprietors in four stores in the 800 block of Fourteenth street northwest shivered early yesterday as they opened their shops and found them unheated in the bitter winter weather.

"Where's the janitor?" they asked one another, looking half apologetically at shivering customers.

Finally they began search for Alonzo Hill, colored, who tends their furnace.

They found him by the furnace door, dead, physicians from Emergency Hospital said, from a heart attack.

Between You and Me

Vandenberg and Couzens on the "Hot Spot;" The Works Relief Bill; Borah Surprised.

By Raymond Clapper

A SENATOR, reflecting the experience of many of his colleagues, said yesterday that never in his public career had he been subjected to such intense pressure as he was from World Court opponents, not even when the bonus army camped on the Capitol steps.

Next to Hauptmann's, the hottest spot in the country during the present cold wave was the one in which Republican Senators Couzens and Vandenberg found themselves the day of the World Court vote. An hour before the Senate voted, these two Michiganders received the chilling word that their Legislature had turned thumbs down on the court. Both already were pledged to support the Administration. They stuck but it was agony.

That situation would be sufficiently uncomfortable for any Senator. It was even worse for these two. Couzens is up for reelection next year. He has the job not only of leaping the hurdle which his own Legislature set in his path but he must win on Father Coughlin's home grounds. Vandenberg, just reelected, doesn't have that worry. But if it is true that he is a receptive candidate for the Republican presidential nomination, there will be explaining to do. The situation is not helped by the fact that the Senators were on the losing side of the fight.

* * * *

Senator George of Georgia was also left among the unhappy. He was pledged to the court, but his Legislature had adopted a hostile resolution. Senator George was absent from the Senate for several days. When the fight became dangerous, Administration leaders called for help and he went down the line.

Another example of senatorial bravery was Senator Hattie Caraway. Elected largely with the aid of Senator Huey Long, she has always been in his corner. She voted for his amendments to the court resolution. But on the final vote, she followed Majority Leader Robinson, and supported the court.

* * * *

Theoretically Mr. Roosevelt can revive the World Court issue at any time, despite the Senate rejection. The Senate voted down the St. Lawrence treaty last winter, but Mr. Roosevelt expects shortly to send it back for another try. He could do the same with the World Court, but few expect him to, at least before the next presidential election. Some Court opponents expect to play during the next campaign upon the probability of another attempt. The wish may be father to the thought, for in certain States it is a sure-fire issue which court opponents up for reelection would find to their advantage. Organizations favoring the court will continue their fight. Most Democratic Senators who went down the line, however, hope they never hear of the matter again. It has been too painful.

* * * *

What the effect of the Senate's action will be on American foreign policy is a subject of wide conjecture. Prevailing opinion is that it will nip any further talk about American entry into the league, that it will tend to encourage a policy of economic self-containment, cause European nations to be more skeptical of being able to enter into plans calling for American cooperation, either politically or economically, and make prospects of reviving export trade through reciprocal treaties more discouraging than ever.

As if he had not heard about the Senate's rejection of the court, Secretary of Commerce Roper proposed yesterday that an international board be formed with power to allocate to the nations of the world production quotas of farm commodities and manufactured products.

Secretary Roper said that if such a body could compel member nations to stick by their quotas, overproduction and surpluses would be wiped out in a short time.

His proposal was made to the Senate Agriculture Committee at a conference called by Chairman Smith, who 24 hours before had voted against the World Court.

Senators and Representatives report that mail from constituents in behalf of the Townsend bill is becoming more belligerent. A Middle Western Senator is beginning to receive letters telling him to "stop being a yes man for the President" and to "remember you are our servant." There is fear that in view of the success of World Court opponents in using the radio to inflame the public, Townsendite will try the same tactics.

* * * *

Certain Senators believe the Administration is trying to work a squeeze play on them to force the work relief bill through in a hurry. Under its iron-bound rules, the House was able to deliver promptly. The Senate showed signs of taking its time. Whereupon from Administration quarters came the word that Federal relief funds would be exhausted in about ten days and that it was desirable that Congress act promptly on the $4,880,000,000 work relief measure. This has impressed a number of Senators as an attempt to stampede them into quick action.

Several have proposed taking the $880,000,000 out of the general works bill, since it is only a reappropriation anyway, and rushing through a joint resolution authorizing expenditure of this money immediately for continuing relief payments. That would then permit the Senate to consider at more length the lump powers it proposed to give the President in disbursing the $4,000,000,000 fund. Relief would go on without interruption.

Administration advisers who have had considerable political experience believe needless bad feeling is being provoked in Congress by the way the pending measure is being handled. For instance, Senator Carter Glass, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, which is in charge of the bill, is being ignored. The Administration contact man on the committee is Senator James Byrnes, of South Carolina. The Senate is jealous of its seniority traditions and any slight to them is resented.

"Senator," he said, "you're wanted inside. Your bill is up."

"What is my bill?" the surprised Senator asked. He disappeared inside, but returned within a few minutes.

"It passed," he said.

The measure would amend the mining laws to permit sale of public land adjacent to mines for construction of ore-reduction works, airplane landing fields and airports. Secretary Ickes opposed the bill.

NRA a Failure, Union Leaders Tell Hearing

Organized Labor Looks to Proposed 30-Hour Week for Relief.

the hours of work sufficient to absorb at least a majority of the unemployed, and an increase in mass purchasing power sufficient to create a market for the products of industry."

The session closed with an oration by Lewis, an oration that made the loud speaking system in the Commerce auditorium seem superfluous, and that kept 1,000 business men and labor representatives on the edges of their seats.

Shaking his mane of hair, the stocky president of the miners' union shouted:

"The record of the NRA should make cold chills of apprehension run down the spinal vertebrae of every captain of industry in this country."

Between the labor speeches were statistical talks by heads of business concerns, talks that were colorless beside the fighting language of the union leaders.

He Cites Statistics.

Lewis shot statistics in rapid-fire order at the Recovery Board and the audience. He declared that 18,000,000 persons are on public relief, that 6,500,000 of these are employable persons and that of the latter number 4,000,000 are nonagricultural workers. He declared there are 300,000 persons on relief who have never in their lives been able to obtain any kind of job. He declared that in 1929 the country's pay roll was $52,000,000,000 and that in 1933 it had dropped to $29,300,000,000.

"To fill that gap the Government has supplied only $2,500,000,000 since 1933," he shouted.

He declared that unemployment has been reduced only 2,500,000 under the New Deal.

No Longer Factor, He Says.

Code maximum hours, Lewis said, have as a whole merely confined the normal working hours of industry and have resulted in no pressure to return workers to jobs.

"Instead of cooperating, industry is resisting to a man the opening of codes for consideration of shorter hours," Lewis said. "This can mean that NRA can no longer be considered a factor in recovery attempts and in reemployment."

Lewis reviewed the last election, in which he declared that "officials who asked us to hope" were defeated.

Shaking his fist, he declared that "that is the handwriting on the wall."

"You can't get away with it," he shouted directly into the ears of the Recovery Board members time after time.

Green had previously told the board that the shortcomings of NRA were due to one fundamental fact: "the NRA has not had the benefit of full participation of organized labor in code making and code administration."

Flanders Presents Plan.

Answering Green, Ralph E. Flanders, Vermont manufacturer, argued for paying time-and-a-half for overtime above 40 hours a week, and paying double time for overtime above 50 hours.

"This suggestion," he said, "fits into the normal operations of higher economy, permits the production of and expanded volume of goods and services, distributes them more equitably, tends to tone down the extremes of speculative business expansion, and will effect an automatic spreading of employment in dull times."

Flanders, in reply to questions, said that industry as a whole conceded the necessity for one rigidity—the minimum wage. He said he did not include maximum hours.

Textiles Decline Noted.

Robert R. West, speaking for the cotton textile industry, declared codes have so increased costs that there has been a serious decline in export business and that this decline has reduced the possibilities of the industry for giving employment.

"It is now proposed to further reduce the work week to make room for others who need work," he said. "It seems a fantastic procedure to try to cram additional employes into an industry which has already substantially reemployed its members."

He declared the whole tendency of shorter hours with wages maintained would be to reduce employment.

Arizona Senate Votes Death for Kidnaping

Phoenix, Ariz., Jan. 30 (AP).—A bill providing the death penalty for kidnaping, if the victim is harmed, passed the Arizona Senate unanimously today.

If the victim escapes harm, kidnaping would be punishable by a prison sentence of from 20 to 50 years, with no hope of parole until the minimum has been served.

NRA Unit Asks Wide Changes On Auto Code

Research Division Urges Adjustment of Hours for Industry.

radical changes can be made without a hearing.

Would Adjust Hours.

The present code, to which labor violently objects, provides that working hours shall average 40 per week over the life of the code, but that employes shall work as much as 48 hours per week during peak periods. The new proposal is based on the theory that new models would give the industry momentum in the fall and that this would be carried on by spring buying.

The new code is expected to provide for a 40-hour week for six months, beginning in the fall, when the new models appear. During the next five months, employes would be expected to work an average of 36 hours per week. During the remaining month, hours would be so adjusted, possibly shortened to a very few per week, so that at least 80 per cent of the employes would have work.

The report, a voluminous document, goes into minute detail concerning the experience of the industry and of labor since the code became effective. It is understood that the document is extremely critical of some of the members of the industry and that it charges the code has been violated repeatedly.

New Proposal Favored.

Automobile manufacturers, who are gathered in Washington to consult with President Roosevelt, if he calls for a meeting, have approved the new arrangement in substance. While there are indications that labor, other than labor representatives in NRA, have not been consulted, the proposed arrangement is expected to be more satisfactory to the workers, although it is not expected to meet with 100 per cent approval.

Although President Roosevelt has not indicated what he will do about renewal of the code, it will not be surprising if he follows the recommendations closely. The industry has indicated it would prefer a renewal of the code. Labor has been adamant in its attitude that no code at all would be preferable to the present one.

The research report also recommends various changes in purchase of raw materials by manufacturers so that instead of buying as seasonal demands require, purchases will be spread out so accessory plants can be kept active throughout the year.

Both Houses Agreed On Extension of RFC

Only a few hours before the deadline, House and Senate conferees last night reached an agreement on the bill to extend the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation two more years, the Associated Press reports.

At the conference it was arranged also to get the measure to the White House today, since the RFC expires tonight unless continued before then by law. The extension would be until February 1, 1937, and the RFC lending authority would be liberalized.

A House amendment which was accepted by the Senate conferees would allow RFC loans up to $10,000,000 for the development of gold, silver and tin deposits.

Bill Is Offered To Offset Veto Of World Court

fairs Committee and the House. Much depended, however, on the attitude of President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Cordell Hull. They were silent yesterday regarding future plans for adherence to the World Court.

Democratic leaders on Capitol Hill were reluctant to comment, apparently waiting first to hear the wishes of the Administration. Most of them, privately expressed the opinion World Court adherence was "dead," unless the President urged it revived. Several doubted the constitutionality of the Lewis proposal, since the Constitution requires Senate ratification by a two-thirds vote of treaties.

Mr. Lewis said there were several precedents for his proposal. He pointed out that the free-soilers in the Senate blocked ratification of a treaty which would have brought Texas—then an independent republic—into the Union. Texas subsequently was admitted by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress, he said.

State Department Gloomy.

Meanwhile attaches of the State Department and those in charge of the country's foreign affairs were, in general, gloomy over the rejection of the World Court resolution. Whatever effect it may have on the prestige of the Roosevelt Administration in domestic affairs, they regarded it as a severe blow at the country's prestige abroad and at efforts to bring about a concentrated foreign policy.

Effect of Vote.

The Senate vote, it was contended, made the actions of this Government inconsistent with its professions of a desire to promote world peace and cooperation. Moreover it has chilled the enthusiasm of those formulating plans for further cooperation in world affairs.

For instance, the Administration's plans for a revision of the country's neutrality attitude have been given a setback and may be abandoned or substanially changed. The strong isolationist—if not highly nationalistic—sentiment existing in the Senate, as indicated by the Tuesday vote, has made the State Department timid about proposals to engage in consultative pacts with other powers and not to interfere with the punishment of aggressor nations, such as proposed at Geneva by American Ambassador at Large Norman H. Davis in May 1933 and again last spring.

On the other hand, President Roosevelt by his inability to control the Senate has lost prestige with foreign nations. No longer can they be assured that whatever he proposes will have the support of the Senate. Thus other powers will be reluctant to make agreements with this country.

Coast Guard Saves 27 Trapped in Ice

Cutter Returns to Norfolk on Rescuing Fishermen.

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 30 (AP).—After rescuing 27 fishermen and oystermen from ice-bound boats in the Rappahannock River and Urbana Creek today, the Coast Guard cutter Apache ran short of fuel and tonight was en route to Norfolk to fill her bunkers.

The cutter landed the men at Tangier Island after starting for Norfolk. The men had been marooned for almost a week, their small craft being unable to cut a path through the heavy ice that had formed in the river and creek during the past ten days.

Since last Sunday the Apache has rescued 55 men from small craft menaced by ice. She picked up 17 last Sunday near Dahlgren, Va., and landed them at Tangier. On Monday, she picked up the fishing boat Miss Daugherty with one man aboard. The boat was towed to Crisfield.

Testimony Ended In Deputy Murder

West Virginian Charged With Killing Officer.

Beckley, W. Va., Jan. 30 (AP).—Testimony was completed today as preparations were made to give to the jury the case of Ermal Taylor, 23, charged with the murder of Deputy Sheriff Leemon Martin.

The defense closed after the testimony of Mrs. Taylor, 20-year-old wife of the defendant, that she heard Vernon Lilly say he was going to kill the officer.

Malaria Toll Placed at 7,000.

Colombo, Ceylon, Jan. 30 (AP).—About 7,000 persons were reported today to have died in the district of Kegalle in the last two months as a result of the epidemic of malaria, which is sweeping this island.

Auto Unit Officer Fined in Test Case

Timmons Appeals Penalty for Lacking City Tag.

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 30 (AP).—Police Justice R. B. Spindle, jr., today fined J. T. Timmons, executive manager of the Tidewater Automobile Association, $50 for driving an automobile without a city license tag. Timmons was arrested by prearrangement as a test for the law.

Justice Spindle rendered his decision. $50 for driving an automolocal attorney and member of the association's executive committee, and Charles C. Collins, of Washington, general counsel for the American Automobile Association, had attacked the constitutionality of the State law empowering the city council to impose the tax and the validity of the ordinance on the ground it did not conform to requirements of the city charter.

U. S. Drafts Bills For Many States

governors, once sovereign executives of States independent in local matters of the Federal Government, have become satraps of the President, indicating further the elimination of State rights.

With the adoption of the program of Federal aid for unemployment insurance and old-age pensions, the States also will be expected to make their laws conform to the Administration's desires, under penalty of foregoing the Federal financial help.

The PWA has over 128 lawyers, assisted by a clerical staff in excess of 200. It is the largest legal staff outside of the Justice Department in the Capital.

The bills being drafted for the States are not confined to merely enabling municipalities to borrow money from the Government, but provide for the establishment of various public authorities to engage in the public operation of public utilities and nonprofit corporations to provide electrification of rural communities.

Other bills would authorize municipalities to engage in slum clearance, including the condemnation of necessary lands and the construction, operation and maintenance of low-cost housing and to relax the statutory limitations on the borrowing and taxing power of municipal officials.

Bills to Validate Bonds.

For some States bills are being drafted to validate bonds and other obligations heretofore issued by municipalities for public works projects and sold to the Federal Government. One of the bills drafted for Alabama would permit a public authority to operate telephone systems, as well as power, light and heat utilities. The provisions of some of these bills are reported to be all-inclusive as to the powers and authority of the agencies established.

Bills have been sent to Alabama, California, Colorado, Indiana, North Dakota, Wisconsin, Wyoming and New Mexico—the last two yesterday. They are being prepared for Arizona, Arkansas, Connecticut, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Maine, New Jersey, New York, New Hampshire, Nevada, North Carolina, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee (by both PWA and TVA legal experts), Texas, Utah, Vermont, Washington and West Virginia.

Woman, 103, Sent Birthday Greeting By the President

Punxsutawney, Pa., Jan. 30 (AP).—Mrs. Mary Michaels, 103 years old today, received congratulations from an illustrious American also observing his birthday—the President of the United States.

To the woman, born in the wooded hills of western Pennsylvania, the President, himself 53 today, wrote:

"I am very happy indeed to join your friends in extending hearty congratulations and best wishes to you."

Mrs. Michael spent the day cheerfully. Although her eyesight has become dimmed, she enjoys good health.

Patman Flings Bryns Gauntlet On Bonus Plan

He Threatens to Override Speaker If Latter Gives Vinson Priority.

Irked by House delay in considering his full cash bonus bill, Representative Patman (Democrat), of Texas, yesterday threatened to try to override Speaker Byrns if necessary.

The undercover fight between Patman and Representative Vinson (Democrat), of Kentucky, champion of an American Legion supported bonus measure, was brought into the open when the Texan made known he would contest a ruling of the Speaker if necessary to have his proposal passed.

Vinson is a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, to which both of the outstanding bonus measures have been referred. Patman, alarmed over the possibility that the committee might seek to let his bill die and report out the Vinson scheme, said that if the Kentuckian's bill reached the floor first he would offer his bill as a substitute.

"If the Speaker rules my amendment out of order," Patman flared, "I'll be forced to appeal from his decision and let the House decide the issue. I'm confident we have more than enough votes to prevail."

Both Call for Cash at Once.

Both proposals call for cash payment at once. The chief difference is that the Patman bill would provide for printing of the $2,000,000,000 or more involved as a means of "controlled expansion" of the currency while the Vinson bill would empower the Treasury to raise the money as it saw fit. Its passage probably would mean a bond issue or new taxes.

Patman raised the issue on the floor when he declared:

"I want the Ways and Means Committee to know now that we will not be gagged."

Obviously angry, Chairman Doughton, Ways and Means Committee, interrupted to reply he considered it "improper" for the Texan to "even intimate or suggest that the committee would attempt to gag the House."

Patman and his friends have sought for days to blast their bill out of committee without resorting to a petition. Unless they make unexpected progress, the measure will not be studied by the committee until it disposes of the Wagner-Lewis economic security program. Representative Blanton (Democrat), of Texas, a Patman lieutenant, has demanded a special rule to bring the measure out ahead of the Vinson proposal.

Vinson declined to say which bill he expected to be reported out.

"I'm for immediate payment of the bonus," he said, "and I believe my bill has the best chance of passage."

Patman Assails Legion.

Earlier Patman renewed his criticism of the American Legion for supporting Vinson's measure and asked for the resignation of Frank N. Belgrano, jr., as national commander.

His measure, Patman insisted, "is the only bill that will carry out the mandate of the Legion against creating additional debt or without undue inflation. If the commander won't get back of a bill to comply with the mandate of his convention he should resign and give the job to someone who will."

Representative McFarlane (Democrat), of Texas, charged by inuendo that the Vinson bill was advanced in the hope of demoralizing the bonus forces and blocking passage. He commended the Veterans of Foreign Wars for its efforts in behalf of bonus legislation.

Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, replied that the Legion opposed the Patman plan because it would call for "printing press money."

Sheppard Denies Ickes Ignored Him

Report of 3-Hour Wait Erroneous, Texan Says.

Senator Sheppard (Democrat), Texas, today termed reports that Secretary Ickes had kept him waiting three hours before granting him an interview as "entirely in error," the Associated Press says.

He said Ickes had always treated him with "respect and consideration" and asserted another report saying the Secretary had put him off a week on a second engagement was "based on a misunderstanding of the facts."

The Texan said the week's postponement was arranged at his own request and to suit his own convenience.

Another Texas Democrat, Representative Blanton, got permission in the House Tuesday to expunge from the record some unfavorable observations he had made on Ickes.

Slash in Utility Rate Proposed in Virginia

Richmond, Jan. 30 (AP).—The State corporation commission has asked the Virginia Electric & Power Co. to make another substantial rate reduction and has been told the company will take the rate under advisement, Chairman Lester Hooker announced today.

Mr. Hooker said that following a company announcement that reductions made last year had resulted in a large increase in consumption, President Jack Holtzclaw, and A. Justin Moore, counsel, had been called into conference and told that the corporation commission believes this increased use justifies another reduction.

up, said he regarded grade crossings as a "fertile field" for relief.

"There are over 210,000 grade crossings in the United States which have no attendants on them whatever," he said. "It would take $15,000,000 alone on that one item."

He said railroads would be expected to pay their "proportionate share" of grade-crossing improvement, and might borrow the necessary funds from the RFC. Peoples further estimated that $390,000,000 could quickly be put to work on rivers and harbors projects.

Charges Testimony Changed.

Senator L. J. Dickinson, of Iowa, minority member of the committee, who will head a G. O. P. effort to "earmark" the huge fund for specific projects, charged Peoples yesterday changed his testimony on proposals that the Government sell gasoline. He told the committee the whole program smacks of socialism. Senator Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, assailed the gasoline sale suggestion on the floor of the Senate.

Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said Treasury witnesses "were persistently catechized about the theories and details of the bill, giving answers which I assume were satisfactory to themselves and to some members of the committee."

Meanwhile it was learned that minority members are ready to meet Administration insistence that the vast works bill be passed speedily, because existing relief funds will be exhausted by February 10, with a proposal that the $880,000,000 relief fund be separated from the works measure and passed immediately, allowing time for further deliberation of the $4,000,000,000 remainder.

"Baby Bonds" Passing.

The Treasury's so-called "baby bond" measure, which would render more flexible the Treasury's present bond issuing power, fixing a $25,000,000 "revolving" limit and permitting sale of Government securities with a face value as low as $25, was passed by the Senate and sent to the White House. The bill previously had passed the House. Without it, the Treasury was empowered to issue only $2,549,512,885 in new bonds, insufficient to meet accumulating obligations.

A one-man fight was waged against it in the Senate yesterday by Senator Thomas, of Oklahoma, who warned the public debt is pressing the Nation toward "uncontrolled inflation." He said "controlled" inflationists will offer a measure of their own for financing the debt, and urged postponement of the Treasury refinancing measure until after Senate action on the gold clause, predicting, however, that this would be favorable.

Two amendments to the $4,880,000,000 works and relief bill were proposed yesterday. One, by Senator Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, would authorize the Treasury to issue $4,880,000,000 in noninterest-bearing securities to finance the project. Another, by Senator Davis (Republican), Pennsylvania, proposed payment of the "prevailing" wages on Government projects.

Glass Criticizes Seven 'And/Ors' In Works Bill

(Associated Press.)

Almost every day Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, finds something new in the $4,880,000,000 work relief bill that he doesn't like.

During his scrutiny yesterday he learned that the measure contains seven "and/ors" in the sections granting authority to the President.

"I think I'll introduce a bill to make it a penal offense for a lawyer to write an 'and/or' in a bill," Glass said crisply.

Texas Asked to Sell Liquor.

military activities threaten Manchukuo, intimated the Japanese garrison in that nation might be increased, and said the frontier clashes arising out of the vagueness of the Manchukuan-Siberian border "may cause serious trouble at any time."

"The Soviet government," the war minister said, "is professing a policy of peace but the Soviet army continues to increase its forces in the Far East, especially aviation. We must be prepared to cope with it."

The naval minister declared 50,000 tons of new warships must be constructed annually from the fiscal year 1936-37 onward, adding that this would be necessary "even were naval treaties continued."

Chiang Pushes Red Forces to Mountains

Chunking, China, Jan. 30 (AP).—Hunan and Nanking armies, under Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, steadily pushed the Communist forces westward toward the Yunnan Mountains today.

As the wiry Nanking chieftain injected his energy into the heretofore lethargic provincial armies in opposing the reds, it became apparent Chiang's purpose was twofold. He was driving the reds from China and the provinces into the bosom of Nanking. The provinces affected previously had paid small obeisance to the national government.

The reports from West Hunan, South Szechwan and Shensi provinces indicated the Reds were moving into the west. To the southward the provincial forces, with the aid of 4,000 Nanking soldiers, were reported advancing, and pushing the reds and some allied outlaws into north Yunnan.

The threat to the cities along the Yangtse River appeared greatly lessened, although tension was not relaxed. Many American missionaries arrived here although their outlying stations thus far remained unharmed.

Fortifications along the eastern and western frontiers have been strengthened, the vice commissar said, while aviation has increased more than 300 per cent in the last four years. Aviation accidents also have been reduced, he said, and the air fleet is able to cover four times the area possible in 1931.

The delegates were told that the Soviet spent 5,000,000,000 paper rubles for defense in 1934 and would spend 6,500,000,000 this year.

Sledders Are Warned Against Hitching Rides

Martinsburg, W. State police said they would arrest sledders hooking autos, and, if juveniles, turn them over to the juvenile court for handling.

Bullitt Report On Soviet Debt Asked in House

Foreign Affairs Group to Question Envoy at Session Tuesday.

By Douglas Warrenfels.

Information on the Russian debt negotiations will be sought of Ambassador William C. Bullitt Tuesday by the House Foreign Affairs Committee, it was learned yesterday.

Chairman Sam D. McReynolds announced the diplomat, now in Washington after an extended stay in the Soviet republic, consented to give the committee a "general report" on conditions abroad. He will be questioned in an executive session.

"We're looking forward to our visit from Ambassador Bullitt," McReynolds said. "We had him before the committee shortly after Russia was recognized. What he told us then was interesting and instructive. His report Tuesday should be more enlightening than ever now that he's had a chance to observe conditions in Russia."

The chairman explained the ambassador was not summoned in connection with any investigation or with pending legislation.

Quiz on Trade Due.

"We just want to know how Russia is getting along," he added. "Bill probably will be asked about living conditions there and the prospects for expansion of our trade with Russia. We want to know all about Russia, so we'll probably ask just the kind of questions you newspaper reporters would."

Representative Hamilton Fish, jr. (Republican), New York, evinced keen interest in Bullitt's appearance.

"I have a lot of things I'd like to ask him about," the New Yorker observed. "I would like to know the status of the debt negotiations and whether, after settlement, it is proposed for us to advance any money or credits to Russia.

"Whatever develops, I'm opposed to extending credit to any country. We've had entirely too much trouble already trying to collect the debts to this country of foreign powers."

Request Held Unusual.

Since the State Department is the only Federal agency which does not make periodical reports to Congress, observers regarded the prospective Bullitt committee appearance as unusual.

Debt conferences, temporarily abandoned last October, will be resumed here today. The participants will include Ambassador Troyanovsky, who recently returned from Moscow; Secretary Hull and R. Walton Moore, Assistant Secretary. Officials declined to say what proposals would be considered.

Meanwhile, Associated Press dispatches from Moscow quoted the Soviet government, through Arcady Rosengoltz, foreign trade commissar, as expressing surprise that despite resumption of diplomatic relations this country "fails to avail itself of the opportunity of trade with the U. S. S. R."

Lack of Information Seen.

Washington officials said the reports from Moscow indicated a lack of complete information concerning the situation.

Rosengoltz protested the Johnson act, passed at the last session of Congress, was "without basis" as applied to his country. The law bans American loans to nations in default on their war debts.

"Our imports from the United States during the first five-year plan alone," he argued, "amounted to 530 million rubles. We made all our payments, therefore the Johnson act doesn't apply.

"It is rather strange that because of the Johnson act the bank organized to finance trade between the United States and the U. S. S. R. has been completely inactive. Naturally, such a situation can not bring about a widening of trade relations."

Boy, Father Jobless, Gives Quarter to Ball

Baltimore, Jan. 30 (AP).—The 25-cent contribution of 11-year-old Billy Schaake to President Roosevelt's birthday fund found greater favor today in the eyes of Senator George L. Radcliffe, local chairman than the 30,000 tickets sold for the birthday parties here tonight.

Billy, whose father has been unemployed for nine years because of paralysis, made his contribution from the profits realized from after-school carving and selling of wooden dogs.

2 Hurt at Hagerstown As Furnace Explodes

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 30 (Spl.).—Two boys were injured when the furnace of the Hagerstown News Agency in the Square exploded tonight, throwing the downtown section into confusion.

Benjamin Davis and Daniel Mumma were burned.

Paul Snyder, who operates the agency, said he could not account for the blast.

By Karl Schriftgiesser.

Mr. Benny Powers, formerly of Roanoke, Va., and now of Washington, D. C., has a program for revamping the NRA which he thinks might be extended to all the other alphabetical agencies. He told about it yesterday.

"The trouble with all these New Dealers," said Mr. Powers, flexing his muscles and breathing deeply, "is that they are all tea hounds. Now if I had my way I'd change all that."

Mr. Powers, it had better be explained, was swimming captain at Roanoke College, one of Virginia's higher seats of learning. He was graduated in the class of good old '32 and just at present he is making his mark in the big world as a messenger at NRA. It was from his close observation of New Dealers in this capacity that he arrived at the original conclusion that they all ought to be thrown in the river.

His idea is that once or twice or even three times a week all the clerks now slaving for the Government should go swimming. Seems that all members of NRA belong to the NRA Athletic Club, which costs them $1 a year, like one of those extra curricular activities that are the bane of college life.

Benny would have them all take regular instruction, learn to swim, play tennis, play ping pong, take long walks, eat lots of fresh vegetables and drink lots of fresh milk, and become wholesome, happy lads and lassies. Incidentally, Mr. Powers would like to do the teaching. He'd rather be engaged in something athletic from morn to night than anything else he knows. When he can't think of any other form of exercise he even indulges in adagio dancing, at which he says he is fairly good.

He would be willing to teach NRA clerks how to adagio dance, if they wanted that. Thinks it would do them a lot of good. Anything to keep them from pink teas.

It really doesn't make much difference to Benny what the boys and girls do, so long as they get more exercise. He thinks the New Deal is here for a long time and while he hasn't much of anything to say about the New Dealers having sound minds he thinks they should have sound bodies.

The pulchritudinous future of the New Deal depends upon it, he insists. "These girls think they can eat anything they want and then have someone in a beauty parlor rub it off for them. Phooey. They ought to * * *"

"Take up adagio dancing?" we suggested.

"Either that, or ping pong, or swimming."

We thought for awhile, and then asked him what else he would suggest.

"Raisins and raw carrots," was his reply. "When I go to my room after work I always eat raisins and raw carrots."

That seemed to be a problem for the AAA, so we thanked him kindly and said we would be glad to put his proposition before the public.

Hauptmann Closes Personal Bid for His Freedom

German Closes His Testimony On Fourth Day

Accused Carpenter Quick to Deny Implications of Infidelity.

Q. You testified in the Bronx you went down to the Majestic Apartments March 1, 1932, to look for work?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you go down a week or two before?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you go to an agency?—A. Yes. The Reliable—I got a letter from the agency about the twenty-seventh (February).

Q. Are you right-handed or left-handed?—A. Right-handed.

Q. Now there was something said about that trunk you kept the money in, and you said the trunk was broken at one time?—A. Yes.

Q. When was that?—A. In '33. I didn't have any money in it any more.

Q. What was the month?—A. I can't remember.

Q. Was there at any time anything improper between you and Mrs. Henckel?—A. Nothing.

Reilly shot the question and after the quick answer turned the questioning to Hauptmann's German-English dictionary. He asked Attorney General David T. Wilentz for the letter Isidor Fisch sent him after his return to Germany.

While the correspondence was being produced Reilly asked Hauptmann to enumerate the books he had read in jail.

The defendant spoke of a life of Lincoln, a North Pole expedition story, "Stories of Canada" and "Ancient History."

Q. The letters from Isador to you, where were they in your house?—A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know where they are now?—A. No.

Q. Do you remember the contents of those letters?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the contents of the first letter?—A. He didn't say anything particular. Only about his trip and he is well. Only little things.

Hauptmann said he sent Fisch a postal card in reply and subsequently received a postcard from Fisch.

Wrote About "Fours."

Q. The next communication, was it a card or a letter?—A. It was a letter.

Q. Do you remember what he said?—A. The letter I got from Mr. Fisch was about the furs.

Hauptmann again was pronouncing the word "furs" as if it were "fours."

Q. So there was a continuous correspondence between you about the furs?—A. Yes.

Q. And was there correspondence about the stocks?—A. Yes. In every letter he asked me about the stocks.

Reilly produced a booklet and asked Hauptmann to spell the word designated. The word was "boat" and Hauptmann spelled it correctly.

Q. Is it not a fact the German "t" is different from the English "t?"—A. The German is different.

Q. And this word, you say you wrote it b-o-a-t?—A. Yes.

Q. When was it the President said gold was no longer legal tender?—A. In March, '33.

Q. That was when you turned in the $750?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you know that if they sent you any questionnaire on the gold you would be discovered to be an alien and be sent back to Germany?—A. Yes, I know dat.

Q. During what time were you passing those bills?—A. From the time I fond them until my arrest.

Q. For a period of over a month?—A. Yes.

Bought Shoes Openly.

Q. During all the time you didn't change your license plate. You didn't change your name, did you?—A. No.

Q. You took your wife to buy shoes with one of the bills, openly?—A. Yes.

Q. When you were arrested you didn't try to conceal that you had a gold certificate?—A. No.

Q. And when the man at the gas station asked you about the bills you made no effort to hide your license plates, did you?—A. No effort at all to hide anything.

Q. Now I ask you again, did one dollar of the Lindbergh ransom money pass into your bank or brokerage accounts?—A. Not one dollar.

Q. Now they have made an exhibit of a large plane. Is this your plane?—A. That's my plane.

Q. How long before your arrest did you use it?—A. This plane was never used since 1928.

Q. When was it sharpened?—A. Not since.

Q. Where was it in the garage?—A. It was on a rear shelf at the rear wall of the garage.

Q. When did you last see the plane spoken of?—A. I can't remember when I saw it last.

Q. These wooden planes, they are not very expensive, are they?—A. I guess they are the cheapest you can buy.

Q. How much did you pay for it? A. I don't remember. Two dollars.

Q. Are any of your chisels missing?—A. I have to look at the tool box.

Two Days' Work.

Wilentz walked over to the witness with the Majestic Apartment pay roll sheets.

Q. Do you see your name?—A. Yes.

Hauptmanns Confer—Under Eyes of Guards

Associated Press Wirephoto.

Q. How many days' work?—A. Eleven.

Q. What is the pay rate? A month?—A. Richard Hauptmann, $100.

Q. Now, is there anything on here that shows you worked the 2d of April?—A. It shows two days. That's how I know I worked the 2d.

Q. That's your testimony, but does the record show it?—A. I am not familiar with this record; how they keep it.

Q. While you look at it, will you tell us the rate of pay it shows?—A. $100 rate.

Wilentz took the "Jafsie" address board.

Q. Is it the fact that you did testify you wrote the address on the panel?—A. Not in this court.

"That was in the Bronx," Reilly interjected.

Q. Is it your lumber?—A. I can't prove it if it is or not.

Q. I don't want you to prove it.—A. In every house it is the same——

Q. Is this or is this not your lumber?—A. I can't say yes or no.

Q. So the wood is the same in every house?—A. Yes.

Q. Every house hasn't got your handwriting on it?

Mrs. Hauptmann on Stand.

Mrs. Hauptmann was called.

Q. You are the wife of the defendant?—A. Yes, I am.

Q. When did you come to America?—A. In 1924.

Q. Who did you first work for?—A. Mrs. Rosetta Rosenbaum.

Q. Your occupation when you came to the United States was it general housework?—A. Yes.

She said she worked until the middle of 1925 and married Hauptmann October 10, 1925, at City Hall, New York.

Q. How much did you make when you worked for Mrs. Rosenbaum?—A. The first year I made $50 a month. The second year $55.

Q. When you met your husband what was his occupation?—A. When first I met him I think he worked as a mechanic, and then as a carpenter.

Q. How much was he making then?—A. $66, I remember that; $66 a month.

She told of Hauptmann opening a bank account in her name. She said she was aware he was illegally in the United States.

Q. When was it you began to work for the Fredericksens?—A. In June, 1929.

Q. What kind of a store did they have?—A. A bakery and lunch room.

Q. What was your position?—A. Counter girl and waitress.

Q. What were you paid?—A. First, $18, and later on $20—and tips.

Q. When you worked in Fredericksen's did Mrs. Fredericksen have regular days off?—A. Yes, Tuesdays and Fridays.

'They Were Making Music.'

Q. Now on Tuesday March 1, 1932, did your husband call for you?—A. He did.

Q. What time did he call for you that night?—A. Maybe 7, quarter after 7.

Q. How long did he wait for you?—A. Until 9:30 or a quarter to 9. Then we went home together.

Q. Do you recall what time your husband went to work in March?—A. He took me down and went right to work.

Q. Now do you remember another date, April 2, 1932?—A. Yes I remember that.

Q. Do your remember who was in your house that night?—A. Yes, Hans Kloeppenburg was there with Richard. They were making music.

Q. What instrument did your husband play?—A. Mandoleen.

Q. What did Hans play?—A. Geetar.

Q. Do you know the date of Richard's birthday?—A. Yes.

Q. What date is it?—A. November 25.

Q. You'd remember that?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember November 26, 1933, what day?—A. It was Sunday.

Q. Who was there?

The witness named her niece, Isidor Fisch and two others.

Q. It was a birthday party?—A. Yes, my husband's.

Q. When was your baby born?—A. November, 1933.

Q. What is his name?—A. Manfried.

Q. Who named him Manfried?—A. My niece.

Q. What niece?—A. Mrs. Miller.

Q. Do you remember some time after you moved to Rauch's a car breaking down in front of your house?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember he wanted to sell you some of the wood?—A. Yes, but he wanted too much.

Q. But was some of the wood used in building the garage?—A. Yes—the floor.

Calls Husband Faithful.

Q. When did you first meet Mrs. Henckel?—A. In October, 1932, when I got back from Germany.

Q. Where?—A. In her home.

Q. Who brought you there?—A. My husband.

Q. Did you ever entertain any thought Mrs. Henckel and your husband had been unfaithful?—A. Mrs. Henckel was not only a friend of my husband but she was my friend, too.

Q. Did you ever entertain any thoughts that your husband was untrue?—A. Never.

Q. When did you first meet Isador Fisch?—A. When I came back from Germany, 1932. I think at Henckel's house.

Q. When was it you first learned Col. Lindbergh's baby had been kidnaped?—A. It was a Wednesday morning. A customer showed me a paper over the counter.

Mrs. Hauptmann slowly turned her head. Her gaze rested full on the face of Col. Lindbergh. She appeared defiant. For a full five seconds she looked at the aviator, the back of whose neck turned red.

Reilly turned to a farewell party for Fisch before he sailed for Germany.

Q. Did Fisch bring anything to the house?—A. I heard he did.

The answer was stricken.

The defendant's wife said Fisch asked her if he could leave some suitcases with them. She said she saw one.

Q. Now you had a broom closet there?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you first see the suitcases Fisch left?—A. He brought them a week before he left——

Q. A week before?—A. Yes, maybe a few weeks before and asked if he could leave them with us when he went to Germany. I said yes.

Q. Did you notice at any time a cardboad box on the top shelf of that closet?—A. I never use that shelf.

Called a Plumber.

Q. Now at one time did you have a plumber come in and look at it?—A. Yes.

Q. There were no broken pipes in that closet. He found none?—A. No.

Q. You trusted your husband, didn't you?—A. Who shouldn't trust a husband?

Wilentz took up cross-examination.

Q. Have you kept an account of all the money you earned since you've been in this country?—A. In this country?

Q. Yes. How much do you say you earned?—A. A little over $7,000.

Q. You saved most of it?—A. Yes.

Q. You and your husband at one time had a joint bank account?—A. Yes.

Q. All the family funds were put in that account?—A. No, not all.

Q. Well, your savings?—A. Yes.

Q. Mrs. Hauptmann, I believe you said Fisch left some trunks and boxes. How long were the boxes?—A. About 2 feet (she illustrated).

Q. And what was in the boxes?—She told of clothes, pictures and personal belongings.

Q. What was in the satchel?—A. I don't know.

Q. A small satchel?—A. Yes.

Q. You worked very hard, Mrs. Hauptmann?—A. Yes.

Q. And up until 1932 your husband worked hard too?—A. Yes.

Q. You saved your money?—A. Yes.

Q. I take it you and your husband were quite happy then—A. Very happy.

Q. And finally your husband started to gamble in the stock market?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you do with Fisch's things? Did you throw them out?—A. No. They were down in the garage.

Q. They were there when the police came?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you see the valise when they took you to the garage?—A. No.

Q. You didn't see the books and papers of Mr. Fisch's in the garage when the police searched it?—A. No. I never did. It was all confused.

Q. But Mr. Fisch did leave with your husband a lot of books and papers?—A. Yes, he did.

Q. You didn't see Fisch's book in the garage? You were excited when they found the money?—A. Yes.

Q. From the end of 1933 to the spring of 1934 you never saw a shoe box in your kitchen closet?—A. No, I never did.

Reached for Her Apron.

Q. You never saw it? A. No.

Q. Your apron? A. Yes.

Q. You always hang it there? A. Yes.

Q. You didn't have any trouble hanging it up there, did you? A. No, no trouble.

Q. Now see that hook, and tell me if it isn't above that top shelf. A. I see that.

Q. You had no trouble reaching to the hook which was above the top shelf of the closet? A. I could do it.

Q. Isn't it a fact that if you looked at the closet with door open you could see everything on the top of the closet? A. I don't tink so. There were shelves at the side.

Q. Oh, I see you are right. There were shelves at the side. How high was the top shelf?—A. I don't know exactly.

Q. You were the lady of the house. How often did you clean the closet?—A. About every week.

A. Did you ever clean the top shelf?—A. I didn't use dat.

Q. How many shelves were there altogether?—A. Three.

Q. And you cleaned the first shelf and the second shelf, but you never cleaned the top shelf?—A. I never used the top shelf. I never went up there.

Took Soap Box Down.

Q. But you told Mr. Reilly you put something on that shelf?—A. It was shelf trimming my niece gave me and I couldn't use.

Q. But you never had any trouble reaching that top shelf?—A. I had to look up.

Q. Now right next to the broom closet is a food closet?—A. Yes.

Q. And the ice box?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you keep groceries in that closet next to the broom closet? A. Always, yes.

Q. In 1933, particularly November, December and 1934 right up to the arrest, you never had to move groceries out because of the wet? A. No.

Q. Never had any water in that closet?—A. Yes.

Q. In the broom closet you used to keep soap and cleaning materials? A. Yes.

Q. Anything else?—A. No.

Q. Wait, you just think please? Didn't you keep something else in that top shelf—let me refresh your memory—you had a tin box there to put soap coupons in?—A. Yes, I'd get the coupons together and put them in.

Q. You'd take the box down?—A. Yes, I'd take the box down.

Q. From December or November, 1933, to September, 1934, you probably took that tin box down from the top shelf every two or three months.—A. Yes, every three months, four months.

Q. But you never saw a shoebox up there?—A. No.

Q. Didn't you object when he wanted to take money out of the bank account for speculation?—A. I said he shouldn't take any more.

Q. Now you remember you were a witness at the extradition proceedings in the Bronx?—A. Yes.

"Always the Same to Me."

Q. Did he (Hauptmann) act differently after you came back from Germany?—I won't say so.

Q. Did you notice any difference?—A. He was always the same to me.

Q. When you were nursing your child, you probably didn't reach often to that top shelf in the kitchen broom closet?—A. The doctor told me not to, so I don't.

The day of the arrest, she said, the police called her down to the garage and "one man said to the other 'Look at this money.'"

Q. You were there when this can of money was found?—A. Yes.

Q. Whatever he did with reference to hiding the money in the garage, you didn't know about?—A. Yes.

Q. When it was found it was a surprise to you?—A. It was.

Carlstrom Called.

Reilly called Elvert Carlstrom.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. Carpenter.

Q. How long have you been in this country?—A. Six years.

Q. Did you ever live in the Bronx?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you live in the Bronx?—A. 1931.

Q. March 1, 1932, is a day you can remember?—A. Yes.

Q. Why is March 1, 1932, a date of significance to you?—A. It is my birthday.

Q. Have you any documents to show the date of your birth?—A. Yes, I have.

Q. Where were you working that day?—A. Dunellen, N. J. I came out there in February, 1932, to take care of Mr. Christiansen's house.

Reilly then had the witness describe carefully what happened when he quit work the kidnap night, March 1. He said he got to the Bronx bakery where Mrs. Hauptmann was employed March 1 about 8:20 the kidnap night.

Identifies Hauptmann.

Q. Do you see anyone in the courtroom who was there?—A. Mrs. Hauptmann, she had waited on me.

Q. Did you see anyone else?—A. Yes; that fellow right down there.

Q. The defendant?—A. Yes.

Q. What was he doing?—A. Reading a paper.

Q. You do not know Hauptmann? A. No.

Q. You do not know me?—A. No.

Q. You do not know any member of the defense counsel?—A. No.

Wilentz opened the cross-examination.

Q. Why was it when you pointed out the defendant, you said "That man," and didn't call him by name, Mr. Hauptmann? Was it an act?—A. No.

Q. Who told you to refer to the defendant as "that man?"—A. Nobody that.

Q. No question about that?—A. No.

Q. When was the last time you saw Hauptmann?—A. That evening.

Q. When was the first time you saw him?—A. That evening.

Q. And that man, you only saw once, you will remember always?—A. Yes.

Q. What impressed him on you?—A. He was laughing at me and I got mad at him.

Q. Were his deep-set eyes what impressed you?—A. No.

Q. Did you see the picture of Mr. Reilly with Mr. Hauptmann when he was first arrested?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you sure?—A. Yes.

James M. Fawcett was Hauptmann's attorney when he was first arrested September 19. Reilly did not enter the case until the latter part of October.

Carlstrom was still retelling his story when court adjourned at 4:35 p. m., and Justice Trenchard instructed him to return to the witness stand tomorrow.

the mind of Hauptmann. If it was an act, it was a good one, for tears fell and his handkerchief was a damp ball of linen when it went back into his pocket.

Anna Trapped by Wilentz.

Anna Schoeffler Hauptmann was trapped into contradictions today by the smooth-working attorney general of the State of New Jersey, David T. Wilentz, but when the sum of all of the testimony for the defense is struck, it is likely that she will emerge as her husband's best witness.

She was calm and unhurried. She talked confidently, answered questions crisply and even remembered to flash an occasional smile at her husband, 30 feet across the room. Lindbergh seemed fascinated by her testimony and never took his eyes off her. Put it down as a good day for the Hauptmanns, perhaps their best.

For Mrs. Hauptmann was able to do more than tell the jury her husband was with her—and not out across the Jersey meadows on some errand of crime—on the night of the kidnaping. She swore that he also was at home on another fateful night—the night of April 2, 1932, when Dr. John F. Condon drove to St. Raymond's Cemetery and handed across the hedge the $50,000 which he thought was going to bring the Lindbergh baby back alive.

Mrs. Hauptmann was a waitress in the Fredericksen bakery, earning about $18 a week. Trade was brisk, she said, and she was the only waitress. Sometimes when her husband called to take her home he would have to sit at a rear table until she had cleared up the last of her bakery chores.

Reilly asked her to raise her voice a bit, because what she was about to say might be the difference between freedom and the electric chair for her husband.

Tackles Three Alibis.

"Now, Mrs. Hauptmann," he asked, "on Tuesday, March 1, 1932, did your husband call for you?"

"Yes."

"About what time?"

"About 7 o'clock in the evening."

"How long did he stay there at the bakery?"

"Until half past nine."

"And then?"

"We went home."

She faced the jury to tell it. Reilly, the best showman in this courtroom, took a leisurely walk across the room to the defense table to allow time for her testimony to sink into the minds of the jurors.

That, so far as the defense was concerned, disposed of one fateful date. Every one recalled the promise that Lloyd Fisher of the defense counsel made in his opening statement:

"There are three improtant dates in this case and there are three alibis."

Reilly proceeded to alibi No. 2.

"Do you remember April 2, 1932?" That was the night the ransom was paid.

"Yes," Mrs. Hauptmann replied in a clear voice. "I remember it well."

"That was a Saturday?"

"Yes."

"What were you doing that night?"

"I was in my home with my husband and Hans Kloppenburg. They played music. Later there were cards played."

Reilly raced on to alibi No. 3.

"There was another date spoken of here—November 26, 1933. What date was that?"

"That was my husband's birthday."

It also was the night, according to Cecile Barr, cashier at the Loew's Sheridan Square Theater in New York, that Hauptmann walked up to the window, thrust in a $5 Lindbergh ransom bill and asked for a 40-cent ticket.

State Takes the Witness.

The date is important. It comes one month before Isidor Fisch, according to Hauptmann, called at his home and left a shoebox full of Lindbergh ransom money. If Cecile Barr is correct in her testimony the whole fabric of Hauptmann's story about Fisch is ripped into shreds.

"And what did you do on that night of November 26, 1933?" Reilly asked.

"We were at home," Mrs. Hauptmann replied. "My husband and myself and Isidor Fisch and some friends."

Thus in a brief half hour of testimony did Mrs. Hauptmann try to sweep away the three most damaging accusations made against her husband.

Then she turned to face the cross-examination of Attorney General Wilentz, the dark-skinned man in well-fitting gray suit, who had stung her husband to such a fury that he called him a liar from the witness chair. Wilentz went at her easily, asking trivial questions at first, putting her off her guard and waiting for his moment. At last it came.

He didn't want to know about dates or parties at the Hauptmann home. What interested him was a little broom closet in the Hauptmann kitchen. It was on the top shelf of the closet, according to Hauptmann, that he placed Isidor Fisch's shoebox, and forgot about it until one day he noticed that the cardboard was wet and that the box had burst. Inside was a hoard of $14,600.

An Apron on The Hook.

What Wilentz wanted to know was how that box could have stayed there almost a year without Mrs. Hauptmann seeing it, for she already had testified she knew nothing about the ransom money. She said the closet shelf was too high for her to see what was on it, she got out of the witness chair and demonstrated how she would have to stand on tip-toe and stretch her hand high in the air to reach the shelf.

Wilentz handed her a picture of the closet. It showed the door open with an apron hanging on a hook inside.

"It wasn't hard for you to hang your apron on that hook, was it, Mrs. Hauptmann?" asked Wilentz.

"No."

"You did it every day or so without stretching?"

"Yes."

Wilentz waited a minute before springing the trap. Then he said:

"Look at this picture and tell me if the hook isn't higher than the top shelf. The one you say you couldn't reach."

"Yes, the hook is higher," Mrs. Hauptmann said slowly.

"Then you had no trouble reaching above the top shelf, did you?"

"No."

Then Wilentz hammered away at a sensitive point. He insinuated that Mrs. Hauptmann, who, like all German women, prides herself on being a neat housekeeper, didn't clean her closet shelves very often.

"You did your own cleaning, didn't you?" he asked.

"Yes."

"Didn't you ever clean the broom closet shelves?"

"Yes."

"Did you ever clean the top shelf?"

"No."

"You don't really mean that, do you, Mrs. Hauptmann?"

Now she was confused. At first she denied that she cleaned the top shelf, then she swerved and said she might have cleaned it, and finally she admitted she had cleaned it "three or four times" while the shoebox full of money was up there.

Removed a Tin Box.

"There was a tin box on that top shelf too, wasn't there?" Wilentz shouted. "A tin box where you used to keep soap coupons?"

"Yes, there was."

"And you took that tin box down ever so often?"

"Yes."

"And you cleaned the top shelf, and took the tin box down and all those things and you sit there and say you never saw the cardboard shoebox on that shelf?"

Her answer came out in some vague jumble of words and faltering explanations. Abruptly Wilentz, feeling he had scored a point, dropped that line of questioning and veered off to another.

It went this way:

"Mrs. Hauptmann, when your husband was first arrested, didn't you tell police you had no idea where he had been on the night of March 1, 1932?"

She fumbled for an answer, and after 30 seconds out it came:

"I did tell some one that at that time."

Then she tried to explain that what she meant was that she knew her husband was with her on the night of the kidnaping but that she did not recall, at the time of his arrest, what was the exact date of the kidnaping. Wilentz cut her short with:

"You have answered the question."

That was about all Mrs. Hauptmann did today, except that she smiled at her husband and said her mind was clear of any suspicion that he had been unfaithful to her.

"Didn't you know?" Wilentz asked, "that your husband was going to see Mrs. Greta Henkel all the time?"

Mrs. Hauptmann tossed her head back and said:

"Mrs. Henkel is my friend and my husband's friend."

"Have you ever entertained any thought that your husband was untrue to you?"

"Never."

Carlstrom Takes Stand.

No one except the Hauptmanns themselves and their lawyers were prepared for the story that Elvert Carlstrom told. He is an apple-cheeked young Swede who used to earn a living carrying boards up to carpenters who worked on the Majestic Apartments in New York.

One of those carpenters was Hauptmann. Carlstrom had friends, but few close ones, in this country. No one close enough, he said, to give him a birthday party on the evening of March 1, 1932. So he drifted up to Fredericksen's bakery to kill the hours until it was time to go to bed. He had a speaking acquaintance with Anna Hauptmann, for she often served him coffee and Danish pastry in the bakery.

There was nothing unusual about Fredericksen's bakery that night, he said. Anna Hauptmann was serving. There were about four other people in the bakery.

"Men or women?" he was asked.

"Men," Carlstrom replied.

"Did you see anybody in that bakery who is now in this courtroom?" asked Reilly.

"Yes, Anna Hauptmann."

"Anybody else?"

"Yes."

"Who was it?"

Carlstrom lifted his arm and pointed across the courtroom, exactly as other persons have pointed in the last three weeks. The only difference was that he was pointing the finger of salvation, not death, at Bruno Richard Hauptmann.

"That man right over there," Carlstrom said.

Hauptmann got out of his chair and stood erect.

"You are sure this was the man?" Reilly asked.

"Yes."

"You don't know Hauptmann personally, do you?"

"No, but I have seen his pictures."

Reilly sat down, a triumphant smile on his face. Wilentz got up to go to work on the witness. Unless he could knock down this man's story, there would be a stream of witnesses to swear that Hauptmann was in the bakery on the night of the kidnaping. Wilentz devoted the rest of the day to Carlstrom and when dusk came he still wasn't through with him. The cross-examination will continue tomorrow.

"No, sir."

"Who else was in the bakery that night?"

"About four or five men."

"How tall were they?"

"I don't know; they were sitting at tables."

"What colors were the men's hair?"

"I can't say except one. His hair was darker than mine."

"When was the first time you saw Hauptmann?"

"That night."

"And you say you'll remember him as long as you live. Why?"

"Because he was laughing at me."

"Where have you lived?"

"Most of the time in New York, in an apartment."

"Did the apartment building have three floors?"

"I don't remember."

"Do you mean to say you lived in a building eight months and can't tell whether it has three floors, but that you saw Hauptmann for 20 minutes in a bakery and you can remember him?"

"Yes."

"You saw pictures of Hauptmann?"

"Yes."

Springs the Trap.

"Did you ever see a picture of Hauptmann with Mr. Reilly?"

"Yes."

"When was that?"

"Right after Hauptmann was arrested."

The attorney general had sprung another trap. Carlstrom could not possibly have seen a picture of Hauptmann and Reilly together immediately after the arrest, because Reilly did not enter the case until weeks later, when Hauptmann had dismissed the first lawyer he retained and changed to Reilly. Wilentz did not press his victory, preferring not to give the witness a chance to correct his testimony.

This morning Hauptmann himself had his last chance on the witness stand. He was called for redirect examination and for recross-examination.

In his favor these points were brought out:

That he made no attempt to flee after he came into possession of the ransom money.

That he did not change his name or address.

That when filling station attendants asked him about the gold ransom bill, he made no attempt to hide the license plates on his automobile.

Against him this was brought out:

That no one can say whether he worked at his carpenter's job on the day the ransom was paid. Yesterday the defense inferred that Hauptmann was at work on April 2, 1932. Today the State brought out that the pay roll merely showed that Hauptmann worked two days in April, and that it contained no specific information that he was on the job on April 2.

Thus did the story of the Hauptmanns end, and out of their hands passed their supreme chance to save the life of the carpenter. Other witnesses, 50 to 75 of them, will testify now, in an attempt to bulwark the stories that the Hauptmanns spent four days in telling.

Inquiry Seeks House Backing In Crime Drive

Rules Committee Will Be Asked to Approve Funds Today.

Approval of the House Rules Committee is expected to be given today to a resolution putting the full authority of the House behind the District crime investigation which was launched on Monday by the special District sub-committee headed by Representative Jennings Randolph (Democrat), West Virginia.

Approval of a request for a special appropriation was voted by the District Committee yesterday at a session which was marked by complaints that police were violating the constitutional rights of transients by transporting them beyond the District line without a court hearing, and that sellers of marihuana were preying on school children with the drug.

The committee called on the crime sub-committee to investigate both charges and Representative Mary T. Norton (Democrat), New Jersey, chairman, later in the afternoon introduced a resolution authorizing an appropriation up to $5,000 for the investigation.

Will Urge Resolution Today.

Representatives Randolph and Norton are to appear before the Rules Committee, headed by Representative John J. O'Connor (Democrat), of New York, at 10:30 a. m. to urge approval of the empowering resolution and an appropriation. Mr. Randolph said he probably would ask for $1,500. General indorsement of the investigation has been publicly expressed by Representative O'Connor and Speaker Joseph W. Byrns.

Hearings are to be resumed by the Crime Committee in executive session, from which the public is barred, at 10:30 a. m. tomorrow with Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, continuing his testimony. Adoption of the Randolph resolution would empower the investigators to subpena witnesses and papers, to put witnesses under oath, and to sit while the House is in session.

Inspector L. I. H. Edwards and Inspector Frank S. W. Burke, chief of detectives, are to be heard after Maj. Brown. Both are assistant superintendents of police.

Use of Marihuana Charged.

The charge that use of marihuana was spreading in the Capital was made by Representative Wright Patman (Democrat), of Texas. Representative Clare Gerald Fenerty (Republican), of Pennsylvania, at once asked that investigation be made to ascertain the extent of the use of the drug.

A new law prohibiting possession of the drug will be proposed if existing District laws are not adequate to combat its sale and use, Representative Fenerty said. He is author of a Pennsylvania law making possession of marihuana an offense.

Extent of the drug traffic in the Capital already has been touched on by members of the crime investigation while questioning Maj. Brown. The police superintendent said that Washington was freer of that burden and crime adulterant than most large cities. The committee plans to call Federal narcotic officials for information about Washington conditions.

Protest against the recently adopted police policy of transporting persons beyond the Dsitrict borders was voiced by Representative Patman and Representative Henry Ellenbogen (Democrat), of Pennsylvania.

Funds to Open Way for Hiring Ruhland Urged

Will Ask Senate Provide $7,500 for District Health Officer.

The public health committee of the Washington Board of Trade yesterday recommended to its parent body that the Senate be asked to appropriate sufficient funds so that Dr. George C. Ruhland, Syracuse health officer, could be offered a salary of $7,500 a year as District health officer.

The offer of George Washington University to give Dr. Ruhland a lectureship post with a salary of $1,000 a year as a move to persuade him to accept the position as health officer received favorable comment at the meeting. It seemed the consensus that the university job would not conflict with his official duties.

After hearing the report of R. J. Posson, chairman of the sub-committee on cooperation with the Board of Public Welfare, the committee adopted a resolution asking the board of directors of the Board of Trade to request the Senate to include in the District bill an appropriation to establish a social service department at Gallinger Municipal Hospital.

In another similar action, the committee voted that its parent organization request the Senate to get back in the District bill all items cut from appropriations for the hospitals under control of the Board of Public Welfare.

On recommendation of Dr. Arthur C. Christie, chairman of the committee, a study of health insurance and old-age pension plans for the District was ordered, with action to be taken at the next meeting on February 27.

Shepard Nurse Gives Version Of Wife's Death

Killing Charge Deleted by Court Order; Experts Reveal Findings.

Topeka, Kans., Jan. 30 (AP).—Clara Brown Wax—testifying under the restraint of a Supreme Court ruling—told a Federal court jury today Maj. Charles A. Shepard prescribed capsules, a mouth wash and whisky for his second wife, Zenana, during her last illness.

Deleted was the quotation Mrs. Wax, a nurse, attributed to Mrs. Shepard to Maj. Sheperd's first murder trial:

"Dr. Shepard has poisoned me."

The Supreme Court, in reversing the conviction and sentence of Maj. Shepard at Maj. Shepard's first first trial in Kansas City, Kans., declared the statement was not a "dying declaration" and that it should not have been admitted in evidence.

Nurse Gives Testimony.

The small, dark-haired nurse said Maj. Shepard, accused by the Government of killing his wife to be free to wed Grace Brandon, San Antonio stenographer, said when he called her on the case that Mrs. Shepard had suffered a nervous breakdown.

"He said once that she had gotten hold of bad liquor," she said.

Maj. Shepard told her, Mrs. Wax said, that the capsules he supplied contained luminal and soda.

Evidence taken at an autopsy after Mrs. Shepard's death at Fort Riley, Kans., June 15, 1929, was presented by the prosecution.

Maj. Hugh W. Mahon, Army pathologist of Fort Omaha, Neb., and Col. Edward B. Vedder, told of finding poison in the examination.

Third Wife Attends Trial.

Maj. Shepard's third wife, the former Alice J. Watt, of Denver, was present today.

Pathologists will be followed on the stand by telegraph company employes, store managers and others who will testify to telegrams and gifts sent Miss Brandon by Shepard at about the time his wife died or thereafter.

S. S. Alexander, district attorney, said the San Antonio stenographer once loved by Shepard probably would be placed on the stand Friday.

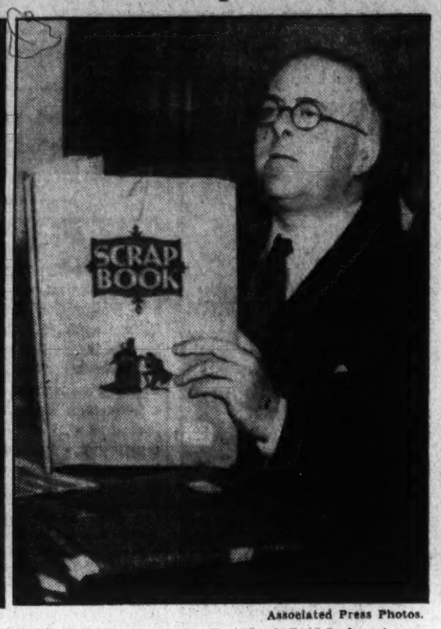
Inquiry Hears 'Fixer' Offered Ship Contracts



Associated Press Photos.

Miss Judy Kitchen and her employer, Laurence R. Wilder, chairman of the Board of Gulf Industries, as they testified yesterday before the Senate Munitions Committee, charging that a "fixer" offered to obtain naval shipbuilding contracts for a $250,000 fee.

2 Witnesses Link Fixer to U. S. Bids

August 3, 1933, in a Washington hotel room. She testified Gravem told of a "chiseler" with sufficient influence to get Wilder $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 in naval building contracts, regardless of the fact that earlier that day Wilder had failed to get construction jobs, though claiming to be low bidder on three destroyers.

Miss Kitchen read a statement she said she had prepared immediately after the conference, telling what occurred. At a conference the day before, she said, Gravem had offered the services of the man describing himself as a "chiseler" in getting contracts.

$250,000 Fee Asked.

The "chiseler," she quoted Gravem as saying, "insisted that on account of the close friendship he had with the President and others of influence in the Navy, he could have the naval program extended and that he would have no trouble in having some of them, say 10 or 15 million dollars, awarded to us for the consideration of $250,000."

Wilder, brisk and positive in his claims, reaffirmed the story Miss Kitchen told of the hotel conference, coupling it with assertions that increases in cruiser contract prices from about $8,300,000 in 1932 to $16,500,000 in 1934 had "the identification marks" of collusion, being even a "little rawer" in 1934 than in 1933.

"If this $8,300,000 bid in 1932 was an honest bid without agreement," he was asked by Committee Counsel Stephen Raushenbush, "does it follow that the 1933 bidding could not be characterized by the same words?"

Deny Knowing Identity.

"Correct," said Wilder, emphasizing his remarks with a sweep of his hand along a colored chart tracing the costs.

Both Wilder and Miss Kitchen denied any knowledge of the identity of the "chiseler" or "fixer."

The House Military Affairs Committee, which has been studying antiwar legislation, recessed these hearings and set others for February 5 and 11, respectively, to consider proposals for an increase of 55,000 men in the Nation's military forces, and a $190,000,000 appropriation to establish ten new air bases.

Salesman Robbed of $20,000 Gems.

Virginia Workers On Strike Again

Buena Vista, Va., Jan. 30 (AP).—Employes of the Majestic Silk Mills this afternoon went out on their second strike in two weeks. The walkout occurred when the afternoon shift came off duty. The mill employs 210 workers.

Dissatisfaction with progress in negotiations with B. Bernstein, manager of the plant, regarding a demand for a wage increase was said to have caused the second walkout.

The first strike ended last Wednesday when the employes' offer to return to work pending a conference with Mr. Bernstein was accepted by mill authorities. They requested that the conference be held by today. Mr. Bernstein, who has been in New York during the controversy, did not arrive today and the employes decided to quit their jobs.

A. O. Thomas, School Leader, Dies Suddenly

Secretary of Education Federation Is Fatally Stricken on Street.

Dr. Augustus O. Thomas, 72, secretary general of the World Federation of Education Associations, which he founded in San Francisco 12 years ago, collapsed on the street at Thomas Circle yesterday, and died on his way to Emergency Hospital.

Physicians said Dr. Thomas, whose address here was 2112 Thirty-seventh street northwest, succumbed to a cerebral hemorrhage.

Two passersby discovered Dr. Thomas, face downward in a snowdrift. They were Allen H. Ayres, of the 1600 block of Sixteenth street northwest, and Harold Langmaid, of the 5800 block of Nevada avenue northwest.

While a few curious pedestrians watched, Ayres helped Langmaid place the unconscious educator in the former's automobile. They took him to the hospital.

Widely known in educational circles in many lands, Dr. Thomas was born in Mercer County, Ill., in 1863, and taught school in Nebraska, where he organized the State Normal School. Later he became superintendent of public instruction in that State. He was commissioner of education for Maine from 1917 until 1929.

During this time he made a notable record in improving village and rural schools.

Dr. Thomas was best known for his leadership in the World Federation, which began under his guidance in 1923 in San Francisco at the convention of the National Education Association.

At this time, which was the anniversary of the opening of the first Hague conference, the new organization was formed to promote the exchange of educational ideas from school men in all parts of the world.

Surviving Dr. Thomas are his wife, Mrs. Ellamay Calvin-Thomas; two children, Paul Augustus Thomas, of Harrisburg, Pa., and Mrs. Charles Whittemore, of Buffalo, N. Y.

He also leaves two brothers, the Rev. L. R. Thomas, of Fort Dodge, Iowa, and Charles Thomas, of Seattle, and two sisters, Mrs. William Dyall, of Mount Pleasant, Iowa, and Mrs. James Shaun, of Clarinda, Iowa.

Funeral arrangements had not been completed late yesterday.

Farm Lad, Shot By Companion, Dies; Two Held

County Police Probe Death of Howard Jenkins, 14, at Beltsville Farm.

Wounded in the chest by a shotgun charge fired by one of his youthful companions, Howard Jenkins, 14, of the Beltsville Experiment Farm, died in Casualty Hospital here early last night.

The youngster, son of James Jenkins, a farmer employed on the Beltsville project, was at play in the small house in which he lives with his father on the southwest corner of the farm.

With him were his brother, Jesse, 8, and Arthur and James Lizear, 17 and 15 year old companions.

According to Prince Georges County police, one of the youths went to the bedroom and obtained the shotgun while the rest were eating dinner.

Either in play or in a general scuffle to determine who was to hold the gun, the trigger was pulled. Young Jenkins collapsed with the charge in his chest.

He was shot from a distance of less than 5feet, Prince Georges County police asserted.

The Lizear brothers were taken into custody and were lodged in Hyattsville jail last night. No charges will be placed against them, according to the arresting officer, Policeman Claude Reece, until a coroner's jury returns its finding in the case. Acting Coroner George S. Phillips, of Berwyn will convoke the jury at 11 a. m. today.

The victim's father was away from home at the time of the shooting. Physicians at the hospital performed an emergency operation in a futile effort to save the boy's life.

Milk Producers To Get Hearing In Relief Fight

Import Measure Seeks to Offset Price Increase Ordered Here.

A hearing will be granted milk producers before a proposed amendment to the District milk act designed to authorize the Commissioners to import milk for relief purposes from distant States is presented to Congress.

The decision to withhold the offering of the amendment came yesterday, after former Senator James L. Bristow and R. L. Sabine, directors of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association, appealed to Assistant Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal to be given a chance to present their side of the case.

The move to seek power to bring the dairy product from other States followed issuance of a new price scale by the producers which would compel distributors to pay 26½ cents for all classes of milk, including that used for relief purposes. The price schedule will be effective tomorrow.

This, distributors said, would entail an increase in the price of milk to the District relief agences, which have been buying the milk at 32 cents a gallon, after it had been sold to the distributors at 18 cents a gallon.

Commissioner George E. Allen said he would grant a hearing to the producers before ordering Seal to draft the milk act revision. Meanwhile the producers are considering exemption of relief milk from the new price scale.

Huge Cake for President's Birthday

House Assures April 1 Doom Of U. S. Pay Cut

the House leaders that the compromise is acceptable and will not be vetoed.

A half dozen members arose to speak in behalf of full-pay restoration, but two Texan members of the appropriations committee, Chairman Buchanan and Representative Blanton (Democrat), opposed elimination of the pay cut on salaries above $2,500 or $3,000, which they termed the "higher brackets."

Buchanan suggested that the House conferees would try to so amend the Senate amendment in conference, but he was overruled by the House vote. Members pointed out that such an amendment would save the Government so little actual money that it could be interpreted as nothing more than a political gesture.

Those Speaking.

Among those speaking for full restoration April 1 were Representatives Boylan (Democrat), of New York; Fitzpatrick (Democrat), of New York; Kvale (Farmer-Labor), of Minnesota; Martin (Republican), of Massachusetts, and McLeod (Republican), of Michigan.

Blanton took occasion to reiterate his perennial attack on the increases in the salaries of District officials, charging that some officials had pushed their compensation up from $3,000 or $4,000 a year to $10,000.

Conferees, who will meet this afternoon are: For the House, Buchanan; Arnold, of Illinois, and Oliver, of Alabama, Democrats, and Taber and Bacon, both of New York, Republicans. For the Senate, Adams (Democrat), of Colorado; Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, and Hale (Republican), of Maine.

Luther C. Steward, president of the National Federation of Federal Employes, issued a statement asserting that the House "has pursued a constructive course dictated by every aspect of Federal wage and personnel conditions.

"Senate and House now have voiced emphatically their recognition of the injustice done to Federal workers, and of the anomalous position in which the Federal Government has been placed by its deflationary wage policy."

plan for the future and promote efficiency.

(3) Enactment of legislation providing dismissal compensation for railroad employes displaced through coordination projects.

(4) Revision of the bankruptcy act facilitating railroad bankruptcy proceedings and reorganizations.

(5) Removal of all transportation from NRA control, and enactment of four minor amendments to the I. C. C. act.

A sharp cleavage between the coordinator and members of the I. C. C. was disclosed regarding his plans for the reorganization of that body. In a letter transmitting the report, Chairman Hugh M. Tate reported that all commissioners but one disagreed with Mr. Eastman. Which side the President will take was not known.

"Radical" Change Protested.

The commission stood with the coordinator on all other points, however, excepting the proposal for dismissal compensation, on which it withheld comment. Concerning reorganizing the I. C. C., Mr. Tate wrote:

"We have had positive and unsatisfactory experience in operating under unnecessarily rigid statutory limitations upon the form of our organization. * * * We do not agree that any such radical reorganization is now called for or is desirable."

In reaching his recommendations, Mr. Eastman declared he considered the transportation from three viewpoints. The first, which he finally adopted, places main reliance on private capital and enterprise. The second called for compelling radical changes in railroad conditions by extensive consolidations, such as the "Prince plan."

The third plan, which the coordinator sees as the ultimate solution to the railroad problem, is that of Government ownership. He does not now advocate this, he asserted, because of abnormal conditions and the high public indebtedness.

Nevertheless, the coordinator outlined a plan whereby ownership of the railroads would be invested in a board of five public trustees. A rental would be paid for the railroads until such time as the board acquired permanent ownership by exchanging Federal bonds for present securities.

Regarding the plan finally submitted, Mr. Eastman declared:

"Its greatest fault is that its good results will be accomplished rather slowly. On the other hand, if well administered and given wholehearted support, both by the Government and by carriers, it holds forth much promise."

Bills to accomplish his program were included in the report. The measure for regulating water carriers transfers regulatory functions from the Shipping Board Bureau to the I. C. C. In offering a bill for graduated dismissal compensation, the coordinator frowned upon the 6-hour day as a means for cushioning the shock of coordination unemployment, and said he would work further on an unemployment insurance plan for transportation agencies.

Sleigh Ride

"The reason you look pale and feel bad," argued my three friends, "is because of those stuffy night clubs. There is no fresh air in those places. Get out in the fresh air. That's what you need." To a certain extent, they were right. I had that run-down feeling, of which you read in the advertisements. I had a cold. "But it's snowing," I protested, "you can't go out and get fresh air when it's snowing." My friends had been waiting for this: "That's just it," they screamed, "hire a sleigh and take a sleigh ride."

That was the ticket—an open sleigh, a ride through the country sniffing eagerly at the fresh air which was to make a new man of me. Locating a sleigh was a horse of another color, if you will permit the mixing of metaphors. New York, greatest city in the world, has few sleighs. There is not a single sleigh company listed in the classified directory.

Finally I discovered a man who rented out sleighs. "A crowd of us want to take a sleigh ride," I told him over the phone. "Good, good," he cried robustly. "I've got just what you want. I have a fine team of horses and the best sleigh in town. What time do you want it?" We arranged all the details.

An hour later, I thought of something, so called him back. "Of course, you have blankets?" I asked timidly. He laughed loudly at this sissy request: "The best in town," he said.

ASSEMBLING a party for a sleigh ride is too easy. Everybody wanted to go, and there were only eight places. People muttered darkly when I had to turn them down, taking it as a personal affront. They realized that they were being denied a great romantic adventure.

Casually, I said to the doorman of our apartment house: "Don, I'm expecting a sleigh to call for me at 8 o'clock." He laughed pleasantly: "Always poking fun, Mr. Sullivan, aren't you now?" I stared at him coldly: "This is no clowning—I'm expecting a sleigh—I'm going to take a sleigh ride, get some fresh air." He looked at me as though I'd gone crazy.

AT 8 P. M., the sleigh arrived with a great jingling of bells. When we went downstairs, people were gathered in groups on the sidewalks to gaze curiously at this forgotten equipage. The sight of it startled me. Instead of the high-backed sleighs, which you see on Christmas cards, this looked somewhat similar to an ironing board on runners. I felt definite misgivings, but it was too late to back out.

Awkwardly, we packed ourselves in on the floor of this open jaunting cart. "Blankets?" I asked of the driver. He nodded civilly, got down off his seat, took the blankets off his horses and brought them back to us. At this point, the respectful crowd started guffawing and their merriment pursued us as we jingle-belled down the block and into the open country, where I was to sniff the fresh air.

* * * *

WE STARTED for Ben Reilly's, at 245th street. "We'll have dinner there," I explained. At Forty-eighth street, seven blocks away from our starting point, I was ready to chuck it. But I couldn't quit, because crowds lined the sidewalks as we passed, and I couldn't quit in front of a gallery. At Fifty-ninth street and Park, the huge traffic cop on duty there halted traffic and walked over to our Little America party: "D'yuh wanna buy a duck?" asked the cop. If he had been a little cop, I would have told him something.

* * * *

"WHICH way shall I go to Ben Reilly's?" asked the driver at Ninetieth street. "Shall I go along Riverside Drive?" The girls were all for this. "It will be too, too divine along the river," said Mrs. Bugs Baer. "Isn't this romantic?" asked Mrs. Dave Marx. The beautiful creature opposite me nodded enthusiastically. So did Mrs. Wynn Girden. Everybody wanted to go places, everybody but me.

"I think maybe it would be better if we turned back and went to a restaurant around Fifty-ninth street," I said, and added weakly: "You know, the horses, the poor horses are all worn out."

Reluctantly, the girls agreed to this retreat, each one of them looking at me with scorn as we turned back to the city. "I suppose," said one of them, "you want to get back to some stuffy night club?" I looked her full in the frost-bitten face and said: "Young lady, you took the words right out of my mouth." And I will never leave those stuffy night clubs again until the proprietors turn off the steam heat."

A Long Way From Yale.

When President Roosevelt first entered the White House he gave enthusiastic indorsement to the merit system of choosing Federal employes. Last June, at Yale University, he discounted the influence of politics in the New Deal agencies by saying, "I can't tell today the party affiliations of most of the responsible people in Government and it is a mighty good thing I can't." To this may be added his assurance to the Civil Service Commission last week that the personnel of the recovery organizations will be placed under civil service rules "at the proper time."

In spite of these and numerous other similar statements it is now reported that the President has exchanged a pledge of cooperation with the patronage raiders of the House. A delegation visited the White House to complain that some New Deal executives refuse to distribute jobs as spoils. Members of that group report that the President has promised to investigate this lack of partisanship in his official family.

Because of the President's faculty of pleasing every one who pays him a visit, the reports from Capitol Hill may not accurately represent a changed attitude toward the merit system. It is evident, however, that the President has not taken any positive stand against the disastrous mixture of politics and planning. His efforts to appease the patronage hunters will be a keen disappointment to every one who has regarded the President as the only bulwark that can save the civil service from progressive demoralization.

As Representative Schulte pointed out in the congressional investigation of local crime, civil service examinations and ratings are not an ideal means of choosing the most efficient public servants. Highly capable individuals, as Maj. Brown admits, are sometimes held back by technicalities. But an ideal unregulated system can be attained, to use the words of the superintendent of police, only "if we could be free, without interference or influence, to pick the best men for promotion."

In actual practice civil service regulations are the only practical alternative to the spoils system. By compromising with the patronage hunters at the very moment when he is asking Congress for vast powers over the public purse the President can only increase skepticism over his fine theories of national planning. He may think that it is expedient to appease disgruntled Congressmen who are chiefly interested in the welfare of their own constituents. But in so doing he makes his own position as the director of a gigantic experiment the more precarious.

In Commendable Spirit.

There is an excellent spirit behind Dr. Marvin's offer, on behalf of George Washington University, to supplement the salary of Dr. George C. Ruhland if he should become Health Officer of the District. In practice, however, it might be highly unsatisfactory for the head of the Health Department to accept the responsibility of a professorship.

The Commissioners ordered a Nation-wide search for the most competent health executive available because they believe that a thorough overhauling of the agencies assigned to the control of disease in Washington is necessary. It would be unfortunate if the man chosen to undertake this job should be compelled to begin it with divided responsibility. As a matter of public policy, moreover, the assignment of one man to two positions should be frowned upon in this period of unemployment.

A more reasonable course, it appears, is that suggested by the Commissioners. In a matter of this importance Congress should have no hesitation in adding $1,000 to the annual salary of the Health Officer.

An Experiment Ends.

Votes in both the Senate and House have revealed the trivial nature of the opposition to the pay restoration compromise. When the opportunity of returning salaries to their predepression base was presented Congress did not need any urging to take advantage of it. If the course of events since this sacrifice was imposed upon Government workers could have been foreseen the reduction never would have been made.

Unfortunately a few members of the House are still trying to retain the 5 per cent cut for salaries over $3,000. Savings from such an amendment would be inconsequential, especially in view of the fact that full restoration of all salaries is contemplated in the 1936 budget. It would be unfortunate if the conference committee could attempt to thwart the clear desire of both houses by this sort of trick.

Termination of the salary cut is especially significant because it marks the end of an experiment designed to adjust salaries with fluctuations in the cost of living. If the impracticability of that venture is now recognized, its cost to Government employes can not be regarded as a complete loss.

Post Mortem.

By a simple act of Congress, without even a record vote in the Senate, the national legislature last June authorized the President to join the International Labor Organization, a technical, though largely autonomous arm of the League of Nations. On August 20 our membership was formally consummated and today the Commissioner of Labor Statistics, Dr. Isador Lubin, is in Geneva, participating in the work of the Governing Body of the I. L. O.

The ease with which this important step was taken, and the failure of the foundations of the republic to crumble as a result, make doubly thought-provoking the decisive defeat of the proposal for American membership in the World Court. From any realistic approach this was the less significant of the two ventures in the field of international cooperation. The connection of the Court with the League is far more tenuous than that of the I. L. O. And the activities of the Court have much less meaning for our national policy than have those of the I. L. O.

Last year, for instance, the Court handed down just two judgments. One was on the question of whether the Greek government is responsible for the continuation of a concession for lighthouse maintenance made with a French firm by the Turkish government in 1860, so far as territory ceded to Greece by Turkey since then is concerned. The other concerned the claims of a British subject resident in the Belgian Congo for damages sustained by him through governmental monopolization of river transport in that colony.

The fact that the United States should refuse to associate itself with a court which seeks to settle such technical international problems in a judicial manner is in itself relatively unimportant. The rest of the world will continue to utilize the Court to this end, and we shall doubtless continue to get around the problem of nonmembership by setting up special arbitral commissions, such as the one which recently awarded Canada damages in the "I'm Alone" case.

What is important is that the United States Senate could first approve our I. L. O. membership without blinking, and then let itself be stampeded by hysterical propaganda into defeat of a measure which had the indorsement of nearly all who have given any serious study to the issue. The outcome is somewhat more than disconcerting to those who realize that the worst enemy of democracy is demagogery.

And what will further cause reflection is the fact that this outcome was achieved not merely by a minority of the Senate, but to a striking degree by Senators from very small or sparsely populated States. South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana, Delaware and Rhode Island alone contributed one-third of the votes necessary to defeat the measure. Together they constitute less than 2½ per cent of the population of the country.

The defeat of the World Court membership proposal was thorough. It will unquestionably greatly set back the steps toward rational international cooperation which have resulted both from our world-wide interests and from the annihilation by science of eighteenth century isolation. But two undesirable factors in this decisive defeat stand out for sober consideration. It was largely achieved by gross distortion of what the issue actually involved, and it was achieved by the will of a minority.

Membership in the Court is now out of the picture for the visible future. But there remains the more basic problem of making our democratic system work effectively and intelligently.

Labor And Codes.

The labor provisions of the NRA are a source of perpetual friction, interfering with the effective functioning of codes of fair-trade practice besides giving rise to many irrational differences in methods of dealing with workers of the same degree of skill. In the public hearings that are now being conducted under the auspices of the NRA, President Green of the A. F. of L. protests that organized labor has failed to obtain full participation in code making and enforcement. No doubt this criticism is warranted, and if the labor sections remain in the code the omission should be repaired.

It would be better still, however, both for employers and for employes, if trade practice and policies were considered apart from the provisions relating to wages, hours or collective bargaining. In that case, the problems that concern labor could be dealt with in accordance with general standards rather than with reference to any specific industry.

For example, the mid-term census advocated by Secretary Roper might provide a basis for classifying labor according to skill and possible interchangeability. Thereafter it would be possible to apply certain principles or policies to these classes not with reference to any single industry, but for whole groups of industries. Exceptions from general rules could always be made subsequently to adapt such general policies to the requirements of particular situations.

In that case, it would be possible for employing industries to discuss and reach agreements upon those questions of trade practice with which they are especially competent to deal. They would not be harassed and obstructed by discussion of wage policies which call for a different kind of negotiation and a very different method of approach.

Facing The Costs.

The cost of the depression to the taxpayers of New York State is vividly portrayed in the clear and decisive budget message of Gov. Lehman. He faces the problem of eliminating an accumulated deficit of between $85,000,000 and $86,000,000 during the next fiscal year. The governor recommends, therefore, the imposition of new taxes designed to raise $55,750,000. The remainder of the estimated deficit would be covered by pushing forward the date of collecting certain taxes and by bookkeeping changes in methods of computing the year-end cash position.

Besides increases in gasoline and franchise taxes and a new income tax on unincorporated business, it is proposed to raise the normal tax rates on personal incomes in the middle and upper brackets, as well as to retain the so-called emergency income tax. Under the new schedules, the rate of taxes on personal incomes would range from 3 to 8 per cent. For certain classes with modest incomes, the State impositions would actually exceed present Federal levies—a development that is viewed with grave misgivings by those who want to avoid the evils of oppressive duplicate taxation.

The pressure upon the State to find new sources of revenue is, however, extremely great. Even with substantial additions to current revenues expected to follow imposition of the new taxes, no provision is made for financing unemployment relief, except for an item of $10,000,000 allocated from revenues. While this marks a hopeful departure from the policy of financing relief needs by increasing the bonded debt of the State, it is a very small sum contrasted with the outlays that will undoubtedly have to be made during the coming fiscal year. Relief liabilities, to be sure, account for $25,000,000 in a budget that carries general fund appropriations of approximately $300,000,000. However, apart from the $10,000,000 mentioned, $15,000,000 is required to meet maturing relief-bond issues and pay interest on outstanding relief bonds. Otherwise the budget takes no account of future relief expenditures.

Gov. Lehman says that "until the new Federal plan has been worked out and made public there is obviously no way of gauging with any degree of accuracy what the financial requirements of the State will be for future unemployment relief. I hope the load on the State and local governments may be lessened through the operation of the President's plan."

As relief expenditures by the State are now proceeding at the rate of about $4,500,000 per month, the proceeds of an as yet untouched $40,000,000 bond issue may be exhausted before the conclusion of the coming fiscal year. Then the State will have to consider another increase in its ever-mounting relief debt.

Such a showing should be a warning to Congress to plan carefully so that the future costs of Federal social security programs will not bear too heavily upon the States. If a rich State such as New York finds itself in serious financial straits in endeavoring to finance its share of present relief costs, it is a foregone conclusion that any program of permanent legislation, even of a moderate character, will entail almost unbearable hardships for many poorer Commonwealths.

Moons And Money.

Are women people or chattels? Is love marketable? Can broken hearts be mended with checks? These are a few of the questions cropping up as a result of the bill just introduced in the Indiana Legislature, seeking to abolish breach of promise suits. The sponsor of this is no crusty male busybody looking after the interests of his sex, but Indiana's only woman legislator, Mrs. Robert Nicholson.

Mrs. Nicholson, in attempting to put an end to what she terms "extortion attempts," also includes alienation of affections, seduction and kindred suits in this proposed legislation. The bill, if passed, would apply to both men and women. Its author fears that her sex may object to this type of equality, but she feels very strongly that women have no "right to such damages in a society in which both sexes are given equal status."

Mrs. Nicholson's premise is entirely correct. Besides being comely, she is a very shrewd woman. But it is apparent that Mrs. Nicholson has been reading too many books of the type which her father-in-law, Meredith Nicholson, writes. Most of these carry the thesis that love-conquers-all and there is generally a happy ending.

One might suggest some "required reading" for this optimistic crusader headed by "Why We Behave Like Human Beings." For as long as there are men and women and moons, there are going to be proclamations of love. And as long as there are men and women and money and proclamations of love, there are going to be breach-of-promise suits.

Mrs. Nicholson has set herself a hard task. Taking the profits out of love is a phrase as catchy as the similar one about war. But, and again the simile holds, it is a good slogan only if it works. In any event, it is a step forward. And who knows—Utopia may be just around the corner!

This country has safely pulled through many an industrial crisis in recent months, and it probably isn't being too optimistic to predict that it will manage to survive the parachute jumpers' strike.

What Does Liberty Mean?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The appeals of patriotic citizens for a return to "first principles" and to the individual rights guaranteed us by our Constitution are seemingly endless. Has it never occurred to these protesting men and women that, in a world changing with such rapidity, the interpretation of what individual liberty means must be thoroughly reexamined and possibly changed?

"The inalienable right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" is splendid in theory, but in practice it proved to be the pitiless exploitation of the weak by the strong, the shrewd, the crafty and often the dishonest, as well as the development of some of the most odious characteristics of which human nature is capable. It meant something more than that, it is true, but the finer qualities which it developed became more and more crushed out by qualities which demand material success as the end and aim of all existence.

There is a new and higher interpretation of liberty, and it comes from Italy. Writing in 1926, almost exactly 150 years after our own Declaration of Independence, Mussolini said:

> The conception of liberty is not a right but a duty; it is not a gift, it is a conquest; it is not equality, it is privilege.

There is nothing which I have read in the protests, which have covered the pages of our generous newspapers, higher in their interpretations of liberty than the unrestricted rights of the individual to ignore the rights of others.

It is not from "rugged individualism" that the new future will be built. It is from the background of a sober, thinking, responsible people, eager only for the individual success which shall be a part of the success of all.

ALICE CARPENTER.

Disappointed.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Every question has two sides. Your exposition of the patronage question represents that of the average blase Washingtonian to ridicule the Congressmen from backwoods districts if they make any effort in behalf of a constituent.

If a better understanding of the principles of our democratic Government prevailed, each Congressman, however dowdy, sorry and backwoodsy, would be respected at least for representing 200,000 sovereign citizens of the United States, many of them taxpaying pillars of the republic. The founding fathers recognized their importance by giving them initial control of the Nation's purse strings.

Washington's attitude is "dig all the money you can out of your constituents for us to spend, then shut your mouth and get away from here as soon as possible."

With a civil service rating and a college degree, I have tried for nearly two years to get a job in the Interior Department when Public Works jobs were being parceled out to the friends and relatives of the minor PWA officers, most of whom are Republicans.

My people have been taxpayers for nine generations and on a little piece of property, by borrowing and hoping for a job, I have been paying extortion taxes to the Government. Yet any foreigner, if he has a friend among the department chiefs, can get a Government job where I can't. Where is the justice in this? F. S.
Washington, Jan. 29.

The Forgotten Woman.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: During the past year a Nation-wide contest was carried on to secure an inscription for the Mount Rushmore Memorial now being built in the Black Hills. This memorial seeks to honor national greatness and immortalize George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt, four great personalities connected with the birth, growth, preservation and perpetuation of the Nation.

I have just read the prize-winning inscription of the high school division of the public schools, which took a prominent part in the contest. Nowhere in the well-written effort do I find any direct reference to the womanhood of America and their outstanding contributions to the building of the Nation, from the time of its birth throes to its present place of supremacy among the nations of the earth. This is indeed the unkindest cut of all! The mothers, wives, daughters, sisters and sweethearts of men—who also gave their full measure of devotion—lack representation in a memorial which will stand through aeons of time. Have we no personality to represent the woman soul of the Nation? No "Woman of the Ages?"

How ashamed we ought to be to record anything in enduring granite which will reveal to an enlightened posterity that we of the twentieth century, in a country which claimed to be foremost in civilization and progress, thought only in terms of men—sons, fathers, brothers—blotting out the recognition that "women were also there," as a woman historian of national prominence so truly points out in a scholarly treatise. PHARE PLEIGH.
Washington, Jan. 29.

From The Aquarium.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have become increasingly aware of the fine consistent publicity with which your paper is favoring the Bureau of Fisheries and its aquarium. As an instance, the visit on January 27 of over a hundred Wanderbirds with Mr. Shosteck.

I also wish to express appreciation of the most excellent pictures in the Rotogravure section of The Post on November 25, 1934.

You may feel assured we will also be happy to cooperate with you. FRANK T. BELL, Commissioner, Bureau of Fisheries.
Washington, Jan. 28.

A Danger To Civil Liberties.

Bills proposing new and more stringent anti-sedition laws will come before Congress and the State Legislatures at their 1935 sessions.

These measures, first, trespass upon the American traditions of free speech and free press. Second, they are unnecessary. It is proposed to bar from the mail all publications of Communist origin, although the Post Office Department now has authority to bar all seditious matter. It is proposed to stiffen the immigration and deportation laws, although, under existing law, persons who believe in overthrow of government by force, or disbelieve in organized government, may be kept out or deported. It is proposed to enact a Federal sedition statute under which mere opinions or utterances could be punished, although present law provides for punishment in conspiracies as well as overt acts against the Government. Proposals to the States include barring Communist candidates from the ballot, although experience abroad has shown that this is the surest way to foster underground conspiracies.

Our laws are already drastic enough to cope with any possible threat. Further legislation would go against the spirit of the Bill of Rights. We trust Congress and the Legislatures will not be stampeded by the new drive against freedom of expression and thought.

It Might Have Been

I
Join hands, Columbia, with thy sister nations!
Sustaining hands of fellowship await thee.
Ominous the ever-darkening shadows!
Now as never all the nations need
The help of each. Thou, my country neediest

II
A century and a half ago, the light
Of morning on thy countenance, God flung
Into thy lap great fundamental laws
As broad and wise as men had ever known.
Nobility of soul was thine, high courage
And high purpose; steadfast aim to point
The way to larger government of self.
He cradled thee within a lovely land
And gave to thee great opportunity.
Hard work, hard thinking was thy lot with vast Reward. Midway down the century
A fearful ordeal tried thy soul. Came with it
Stalwart men who helped thee to survive.

III
Swept down upon a breathless world, next came
That darkest hour of human history,
The unbelievable, the fateful assault;
Triumph of unreason just when perception
Of the horror and stupidity
Of war had grown apace in Western lands.
Europe was aflame and liberty
How vain thy effort then to stand aside!
When once aroused, two million sons of thine
Poured o'er the seas to right the awful wrong.

IV
Havoc threatens once again. In one
Direction only lies the certainty
Of peace. Be one, my country, with the world
In fearless, full responsibility
For peace, and peace will then be undisturbed.

The Post Impressionist

Post Office, Thursday.

"I UNDERSTAND," said Harvey Hetherington, "that the friends of Rush D. Holt, of West Virginia, are advising him to reconsider his decision against presenting himself at the United States Senate before his thirty-first birthday. And I hope," Hetherington continued, "that—since he was duly elected and is under 30—he will listen to his friends. We spokesmen of the Younger Generation must stand together."

Hetherington didn't surprise the Post-Impressionist. Ever since the World War supposedly ended—and that was some while ago, remember—Hetherington's poetry, as you well know, has kept him among the leaders of the Youth Movement.

Still, we had never before met him or any of his school in the flesh. And we had always wanted to.

The Flaming Youth went on:

"I'm glad Holt has stopped worrying about being young, anyhow. Think of it: worried because he was young! Who got the world into the mess it's in today? The old guys, wasn't it? Young men have no more voice in the making of laws than women used to have, and all the arguments that won women the vote apply for placing youth in positions of power.

"The fossils keep on yowling about a 'Conspiracy of Youth' against their world. Why, there's been an organized League of Age against youth ever since government began! . . .

"Well, John C. Calhoun said he'd rather be right than be President—Calhoun or Patrick Henry. If I was Rush D. Holt, I'd much rather be young than be Senator—and I'd insist on being both!"

We were seated in a place of refreshment. The Poet of Youth waited until somebody rapped on the table with a significant coin, then pursued:

"I am looking for the modern Rousseau who will do a book like 'The Rights of Man' on The Rights of Youth. If prose was my medium, I'd do it myself."

Somebody timidly suggested that a certain perspective might indeed be necessary.

"No matter," said Hetherington. "There are temperaments that never grow old. Of course they are envied by their actual contemporaries. But the eternally young goes his way smiling. Is his wife dead? Dear, dear, what a pity! But she squinted—he remembers that she squinted and that there are others who don't. Do the friends of his own youth expel him? All the better. He is a third-degree brother, a Master Mason, in the oncoming lodge."

"Irresponsibility!" said Hetherington—and had to explain to the waiter that it wasn't the name of anything to drink. "They charge the New Young and the Always Young with irresponsibility. But if the Forever Old have any sense of responsibility, then irresponsibility is the quality most needed for the future. Irresponsibility—and the will to be young and to remain young."

All of his hearers, except of course the one who scrupulously records his remarks, were under 25. He glared at them:

"If you undertake it lightly enough, you can at least approximate to the lifelong youth of us who have been so fortunate as to be born with it. Did you ever read my poem, 'The Font of Fire?'"

We don't know whether the others at that table had read the poem or not. We said of course we had—but wouldn't he please read it to us himself?

He already had the book out of his pocket.

"It's a litle thing I did," he apologized, "while I was unemancipated enough to be under the influence of rhyme. But the spirit is sound."

And he read:

"What care?
What care?
The world is fair
Howe'er
The old defile it!
Let Eld despise
And Age despair—
I swear
I'll ne'er
Revile it!
Though all their songs should have such themes
As Puritans made hymns on,
I'll sing my way
And mock their gray
With music clear and crimson.
And so: What care?
I shan't despair—
There's happiness aplenty
For those who dare
Be everywhere
Forever one-and-twenty!"

There was applause. But it was closing-time. We tactfully explained that, thought there might be more table-rapping, there would not be any more spirits.

On the way out, he paused before a mirror and rearranged a gray sidelock over the bald spot on his crown.

"Besides," he said, "it's notorious that old people don't need as much sleep, nights, as the young do. I have to have my eight hours."

New Mercury Editor Is No Jesting Pilate

Will Seek Truth About America, He Says, as He Dashes off to Senate.

By Karl Schriftgiesser.

PAUL PALMER is no Jesting Pilate. His shibboleth is "What is truth?" but he is definitely prepared to wait for an answer. As a matter of fact, Paul Palmer is making it his business to find out the truth about America, to break through the propaganda of both left and right wings of life, literature, and politics, to find that truth which he is convinced lies somewhere near the center.

Tall, handsome, modishly dressed, the new editor of the American Mercury, which will appear on the news stands in April for the first time without the familiar name of Alfred A. Knopf attached as publisher, was in Washington yesterday and he divulged his plans for the magazine that was sired into this stormy world by H. L. Mencken. Mr. Palmer, who will be the fourth editor in a little more than 11 years of the magazine's lifetime, has ideas which will greatly change the Mercury's complexion. It is at least definite that the familiar green covers will no longer, as under the editorship of Charles Angoff, hide a bright red.

It is only within the last year that the Mercury definitely turned leftward. Under Angoff's editorship the tumultuous publication that had been forum for Mencken's long campaign against the Bible Belt and in defense of the bill of rights became, in the opinion of many, a monthly supplement of the Daily Worker. Under Paul Palmer's direction the old pulpit, pounded so many years by the Baltimore preacher and then turned, as it were into a Union Square soapbox, will be rebuilt and remodeled beyond recognition.

* * * *

I TALKED for a while with Mr. Palmer, whose newspaper trail has led him from California, his birthplace, through Baltimore to New York, where once he was Sunday editor of the old New York World, and learned from him the general design which the famous magazine will take.

Mr. Palmer evidently is depending somewhat upon his powers as a prophet for, unlike even the gentle and conservative Ellery Sedgwick, editor of the Atlantic Monthly, he sees an approaching clouding-over of the pink clouds in the American sky. He is banking his hopes upon conservatism. And this is not so vast a departure as one might think, for an analysis of the old Mercury, Mencken's Mercury, will reveal an essential conservatism always present beneath the bombast of the retired journalist's, and his contributors,' styles. Politically it was never radical, except that during the Coolidge era anyone who insisted as Mencken did that Americans can investigate the decay of fundamentals was considered a radical.

"I plan to make the magazine over," Mr. Palmer said, and while he was reluctant to reveal exactly, through a recital of names of new writers, the nature of the change, he did go so far as to outline his general plan. And it is important, I think, for the Mercury has sufficient standing in the literary community still to have a considerable influence. It may be a forerunner of a reaction against the prevalent literary radicalism or, since Mr. Palmer is seeking the truth, it may lead the Mercury to that unpleasant doom which has overtaken what once was the Bookman, although the two magazines were never of a class.

"The new Mercury will have 'nothing to sell'," Mr. Palmer said. "It will seek no panaceas, and will offer no propaganda."

* * * *

ALL the current magazines of importance, the new editor told me, range from a deep red in color to a light pink. "Even the Atlantic Monthly," he said, "is in the latter class." But, I could not help thinking that anyone who had read a recent defense by a big industrialist (was it Gerard Swope?) of the pioneering spirit and rugged individualism, would be hard put to detect the tinge.

"All editors are nervous these days about jumping on the Leftward bandwagon," he said. Scribner's, with its long history as an adjunct of a conservative publishing house, was perhaps the leader of this trend, and for the last few years, in its purely literary products as well as in its animadversions on political and economic matters, has deliberately sought its inspiration among the radicals.

"I am more interested in gathering facts," Mr. Palmer said, "than in drawing conclusions from one idea or another. I think that many Americans are puzzled by so many new ideas in government and in industrial regulations. I want to get Mercury writers to look into all this so that we will be able to say, 'Here are the facts, as far as we can find them, and you may draw your own conclusions.'"

But that is his program only as far as matters political or economic are concerned. Under the literary editorship of Laurence Stallings a broader editorial policy will be followed. Mr. Palmer is convinced that the public has been fed far too much politics lately and that there are many readers who will be interested in leisurely, authoritative, even scholarly discussions of literature, the fine arts, belles lettres.

This is one general field in which he will, to a certain extent, go back to the founder of the Mercury for inspiration. Under Mencken's leadership matters of purely literary interest were the foundation of some of the magazine's best contributions. In the ten-year files of the Mencken regime repose some of the best critical estimates of writers ever written in America, which came from intelligent and capable pens. Many of the better known writers of fiction also had their early appearance in the Mercury. Mr. Palmer wants to "revive" these literary traditions.

* * * *

LIKE Mencken, also, he will stick fairly closely to American subjects, but he will not let the magazine, he says retain the assertively provincial vote on which the first editor insisted. The rest of the world, as it touches America, will come in for discussion, the literary articles will be critical, and the brief reviews of new books that appeared in the advertising sections of the old Mercury will be carried on and extended. Mr. Palmer did not say what would become of "Americana," that impish department in which Herr Mencken allowed Americans to expose their imbecilities.

As our brief talk ended, Mr. Palmer said with all seriousness that he felt it was his "patriotic duty to find out what is the truth about America."

"But I must get on," he said, "I am going up to the Senate."

"To find out truth?" we asked, and did not rest for an answer.

Trade Body Fights Code for Clothiers

Wage Structure Agreement Is Held Unreasonable.

Waynesboro, Pa., Jan. 30 (Spl.).—Headed by Edmund C. Wingerd, Chambersburg attorney, committees representing the Waynesboro and Chambersburg chambers of commerce, will attend a hearing Friday in Washington on proposed amendments to the men's clothing code, designed to change radically the wage structure of concerns operating under similar conditions in these two towns.

Directors of the two bodies contend that the practical effect will be the destruction of the clothing industry in smaller cities and furnish concentration in New York, Chicago, Rochester and Philadelphia.

Wingerd, as spokesman for the group, will point out to those who have the matter in hand the dangers which these proposals have for the town's interests.

Along The Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

What Price Defeat!

IT is to be hoped 'that Senator Joe Robinson didn't feel as bad yesterday as he did in the dusk of the day before when the adverse World Court roll call was announced. Because save for him a good time seems to have been had by all.

BARGERON.

Certainly the droves of Hearst employes did. Certainly he of the booming voice, Father Coughlin, was shoved higher up on his demagogic pinnacle. That gentleman is so feeling his oats that he has lost all sense of restraint. It is a question as to who will burst first, he or Huey Long. Senators Hi Johnson and Borah were quoted as exchanging such pleasantries as they have not exchanged in a long time.

* * * *

It was to be assumed that Mr. Roosevelt would feel bad. It was his first upset of the session and he had made it a major one. A President whose administration turns so completely upon his subjugation of Congress would not accept such a defeat with equanimity it would seem. Not that he is believed to feel any great loss in our not joining the World Court, but because of what the defeat might mean to his prestige.

But a perfect equanimity was his attitude. Attired in a brand-new suit, he celebrated his birthday with the enthusiasm of a youngster. If he felt the slightest upset over his defeat he didn't show it.

* * * *

The truth is that it has its compensating factor. He has made a great gesture in the interest of world peace, and as a result endeared himself to the peace societies of this country. In their eyes he must be the greatest friend they have had in a long time. Certainly he is the first President ever to make a real fight for the World Court.

His action hides the fact, however, that he is seeking the biggest peacetime military budget in all history.

Pending appropriations for the naval and military establishments total some $900,000,000, including the deficiency items. From additional money which the Navy is expected to get from the $4,880,000,000 works bill the total is expected to amount to well over $1,000,000,000.

In fact, one of the stories being circulated about the Capitol in an effort to rush the works bill through is that it is essential the President have this money to be able to throw it, or a large part of it, to the support of the Navy without having to call Congress in extra session, with the excitement that would cause.

The story is very probably bunk, like the one the Hoover Administration used to get one of its emergency bank bills through. The story then was that England was trying to push us off the gold standard. A Representative from the Maryland Eastern Shore, if memory serves, was so patriotically moved that he made a Fourth of July speech. We could now tell England where to go, he exclaimed.

In the light of later happenings, of course, no one wanted to push us from the gold standard. So we pushed ourselves off.

* * * *

The fact remains, however, that appropriations totaling close to a billion dollars are being sought for the Army and Navy and there is, in fact, no telling how much the latter will get from the $4,880,000,000 lump.

Ordinarily it would seem that the peace societies would be standing on their ears. But they aren't. They have been diverted, intentionally or otherwise, to something which meant very little one way or the other. They have been shooting at the moon when their quarry was right here before them on earth.

So nobody seems to have worried over the World Court vote except Senator Robinson. And it is assumed he soon got all right.

No End Of Books

Louis Kronenberger's Anthology Takes the Reader to the Good Green Oasis of Light Verse.

By Theodore Hall.

YOU may enjoy a book greatly and still never once think of envying the author's days and nights at work upon it. But I hardly see it possible that anyone could read Louis Kronenberger's "Anthology of Light Verse" (Modern Library, 95 cents) without being extremely jealous of the fun—all likely eye-strain, headaches and perplexities notwithstanding—which he must have had in putting it together.

For he had one of the choicest fields of letters to rove in. Good light verse, as he says, "is almost entirely a matter of mood and accent * * * The mood is simply one of enjoyment, whether quiet or hilarious, cynical or cordial, simple or complex; the accent is simply one of comedy in its many, various and interpenetrating forms." Quite enough, you see, as a formula for good reading. So, Mr. Kronenberger, whose shrewd book reviews you must have come across in the Sunday New York Times and various magazines, spent a year in making this new collection. And by all signs, a pretty fine year it was. Whether he is reminding us of a sixteenth century verse we'd met before, or whether he's offering a far later speciman pristine in our eyes, he gives us now an altogether refreshing anthology.

NOBODY disputes him when he says that the best light verse in English was that written 200 and 300 years ago. For sheer charm and beauty, laid on with a light touch, we've never since matched the Elizabethan and Caroline verse-makers.

Aldous Huxley had an explanation: "A certain natural and easy eloquence distinguished the comic verse of the Elizabethans, just as it distinguished their serious verse. Their fun is in the grand manner. Whereas ours is, and for the last two centuries has been, in the flippant manner—flippantly low, or else flippantly too high, the mock-heroic."

Mr. Kronenberger hangs their superiority on another peg: "In those days poets by the dozen wrote with pleasure and gusto and from comic standpoint about sex; and sex is obviously one of the very few topics that have any permanent interest for mankind." And he notes that they achieved just the right mood and accent already mentioned. So when an urbane frankness gave way to "a certain prissiness and cloying prettification" among the Victorians, out went good, light verse.

The pendulum is back nowadays, yet we have, as Mark Twain said of his wife's cussing, "the words, but not the music." Of our erotic light verse, Mr. Kronenberger hits the nail on the head when he remarks: "At bottom, most of it is much too sentimental, much too close to self-pity; or it is grimly frivolous with a hard-won Parkeresque sting in its tail."

* * * *

TWO other faults of modern light verse are pointed out—its fetish for cold technique, and its journalistic trend of separating light verse from poetry. "For one person who chooses subjects of permanent interest and of a poetic nature—like wine or sex or youth or human absurdities—half a dozen celebrate a newspaper item, a mechanical invention, the opening of a subway, a department store, a commercial slogan." And the result is that "in almost every instance a poem is dated, is barren of interest and has sprung a humorous leak before a month is out."

But in spite of all this nay-saying to recent verse, Mr. Kronenberger found a good deal which rings true and warm, or heartily comical, wherever in your system you feel such things.

* * * *

FROM first to last, you can have the widest choice in mood. There's the delicacy of Thomas Moore's little observation:

"When I loved you, I can't but allow
I had many an exquisite minute;
But the scorn that I feel for you now
Hath even more luxury in it!"

Thus, whether we're on or we're off,
Some witchery seems to await you;
To love you is pleasant enough,
And oh! 'tis delicious to hate you!"

Or you can jump all the way to the rollicking doggerel of Newman Levy (dated obviously enough):

"If you stick a stock of liquor in your locker,
It is slick to stick a lock upon your stock,
Or some joker who is slicker's going to trick you of your liquor;
Though you snicker you'll feel sicker from the shock.
Be a piker though your clubmates mock and bicker,
For like brokers round a ticker they will flock
To your locker full of liquor, and your stock will vanish quicker
If you fail to lock your liquor with a lock."

And in between are the moods of Herrick and George S. Kaufman, Thackeray and Ogden Nash, Guy Wetmore Carryl and E. B. White and scores more, all ready to lead you to the good green oasis of light verse. Mr. Kronenberger had a grand time, but so will any reader.

Best Murder

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

HERE follows a list of the detective, murder, and mystery novels that I have found most exciting among those recently published.

"Hearken to the Evidence," by H. Russell Wakefield, is one of the most subtle, most thrilling, and one of the best written.

"The Crime of the Chromium Bowl," by Mrs. E. Best Black, has one of the best detectives in fiction—Peter Strangely.

"The Casino Murder Case," by S. S. Van Dine, is perhaps his best, with the one salient exception of "The Green Murder Case."

"The Trail of Fu Manchu," by Sax Rohmer, will grasp and hold attention from the beginning.

"The White Priory Murders," by Carter Dickson, is an excellent specimen of its kind.

"The Shot from the Door," by Charles Barry, has an unmitigated scoundrel who is queerly killed.

"For the Hangman," by John S. Strange, has a group of characters, every one of whom is interesting.

"The Line-Up," by Helen Reilly, will make you want another by the same writer as soon as possible.

Two novels nearly a year old, that I particularly enjoyed are "Murder of a Missing Man," by Arthur M. Chase, and "Shadow on the Wall," by H. C. Bailey.

In spite of the fact that he is the most productive of all murder-writers, E. Phillips Oppenheim seems to be getting better and better; his latest books are, if anything, even more exciting than the earlier ones. Meanwhile, what has become of one of my warmest favorites, Carroll J. Daly? I am eager to meet once more his marvellous adventurer, Race Williams.

Court Protocol Lost In Fogs Of Politics

Foes Won Partly By Default When Its Friends Took Too Much For Granted.

By Elliott Thurston.

WHILE defeat of the World Court was unexpected by its friends and foes alike, President Roosevelt was warned against precipitating the 12-year-old issue at this time. Mr. Roosevelt can not avoid being held largely responsible for the defeat, not only because of the bad timing of the issue, but because of apathy. If he had any real enthusiasm for adherence to the court it was well repressed. The Administration's projection and support of the court was decidedly perfunctory. In fact, many observers surmised that the Administration's real motive for injecting the question at this time was strictly political—a piece of strategy to keep the Senate busy while waiting for the New Deal's domestic program to come over from the House.

However this may be, Mr. Roosevelt certainly exhibited no deep desire to push the court matter through to a successful conclusion. Conversations which he held with Senate leaders turned on the politics of the issue, rather than upon its real merits. Mr. Roosevelt was given two kinds of advice, all political. Thus one group of Senate leaders argued that there was no sense in bringing up a somewhat stale matter which would arouse the opposition of the agrarians and Republican progressives whose support the New Deal wants and has solicited all along. Mr. Roosevelt was reminded that the voters in general were far more interested in affairs at home than in the remote matter of the "foreign" court. He was advised to maneuver the court into the background again, as soon as the domestic program reached the Senate.

In other words, he was told that if the court must be dragged out to satisfy its friends, it had better be shelved again before it stirred up too many of its foes in the realms of politics and of the press. This was strictly political advice—and good advice as it turned out. For although the group which proffered this counsel did not think the court would be beaten on a final vote, they warned that it might be beaten—which would amount to a defeat for the President. They saw no use in taking the risk, just as they saw nothing to be gained politically by raising the court issue or by actually joining the court. Senator Pittman, chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, was among those who took this general view.

* * * *

ON THE other hand, Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, Democratic floor leader, cited that the Democratic platform called for adherence to the court, that a large number of organizations and individuals interested in world peace, achieved through international cooperation, were strongly pressing for action and complaining that the court had been jockeyed around altogether too much last winter and before.

The group for which Senator Robinson spoke felt under obligation as well as pressure. Some of them, while committed to the court, were far from eager to inject the issue but concluded that it was better politics for them, at least, to go through with it without further stalling. Robinson was obliged to assume the responsibility of leading the fight for adherence, while Pittman, though chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and the logical one to lead the fight, stayed in the background.

The fight itself was none to well managed. There was apathy not only at the White House but among the alleged friends of the court in the Senate. The foes of the court had the best of the argument politically, since it is far easier to conjure of real or imaginary objections to the court than to explain what benefits or gains would come from joining it. It would be easier to sell the league than the court, because there is much more to be said for joining the league than for joining the court, and about all that can be said against the league applies with equal force against the court. Even so, the opposition won largely by default. They were able to achieve a victory which they did not dream they could snatch from a Senate more subject to the presidential will, once exerted, than ever before in history.

* * * *

IT NOW appears that Senator Robinson at no time could count enough supporting votes to insure favorable action. The President made no determined effort to round up enough votes. The court's supporters took altogether too much for granted. The opponents on the other hand were as busy as beavers fighting what looked like a losing battle. They probably set a new record for instigating protests, which poured in on the Senate in unprecedented volume. Seldom, if ever, has a minority made so much of so little. By radio, press and public platform appeals, they touched all the wide range of political passions and prejudices stored up by a public traditionally hostile to anything even remotely savoring of a foreign entanglement. Father Coughlin was a host in himself.

The court, like the league, got lost in a fog of politics. And toward the end the Senate debate had reached that point of absurdity where, as was pointed out by the New Yorker, the only concern seemed to be to make sure that the United States would never lose a case which it or anybody else submitted to this solemn tribunal!

DeCalderons Hosts at Fete In Embassy

Several Guests Arrive After Symphony Concert.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon

The Spanish Embassy was the rendezvous for smart society yesterday afternoon when the Ambassador and Senora de Calderon entertained at a large reception. The embassy, always a charming house, was delightful with its warm colored furnishings. Even the patio, glass-enclosed and spring-like with growing plants, ferns, begonias and bright geraniums, was a place for the guests to gather and to chat over a cup of tea, or a glass of the famous Spanish sherry which the Ambassador serves in lieu of cocktails.

Senora de Calderon received before a bright fire in one of the drawing rooms, and wore an afternoon frock of black crepe with long dolman sleeves of black and silver-striped lame. Her young daughter, Senorita Pauline Calderon, was there also, wearing a simple frock of navy blue crepe with a scarf of printed silk. With her was Miss Maria Majorca, a young friend from London, who is visiting at the Embassy. She wore a crepe frock of pervenche blue.

Senora de Calderon was assisted by the ladies of the embassy staff, Senora de Yrujo, wife of the Minister-Counselor, who has recently recuperated from an attack of the grippe but who looked most charming in a costume of brown satin and crepe with a high crowned turban to match, and Senora de Echegaray, pretty Russian wife of the Agricultural Counselor of the embassy, who was in black trimmed with touches of white. At the tea table several other ladies took turns pouring tea or coffee, both of which were welcome to those coming in from the cold. Mrs. Arthur Wiggin, Spanish wife of the First Secretary of the British Embassy, was among these. She wore a black gown trimmed with wide revers of scarlet crepe and a small black hat. Among those glimpsed were the Ambassador of Peru, Senor Don Manuel de Freyre y Santander; the Commercial Counselor of the British Embassy and Mrs. Harry O. Chalkley, the latter in a frock of sage green crepe with a smart black hat, and a shoulder cape of ermine; the First Secretary of the Argentine Embassy, with Senora de Urquiza, the latter wearing a woolen frock of deep blue with a hat to match; the three young daughters of the Ambassador of Chile, Senoritas Marta, Graziella and Rebeca Trucco, all wearing smart afternoon ensembles of black; the Counselor of the Swedish Legation and Baroness Beck-Friis.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

HOMER MAY HAVE been right in his belief "Few sons attain the praise of their great sires, and most their sires disgrace." But the statement can't be stretched to include daughters—judging from the number of daughters of distinguished men who are now prominent in governmental, literary and dramatic circles.

In countless cases, feminine offspring of great men, not content to rest on parental laurels, have come to the fore and made a name for themselves. An outstanding example is Ruth Bryan Owen, daughter of the famous statesman, William Jennings Bryan.

Attention would have been lavished on her even if she had remained merely the daughter of the "silver tongued orator," but obviously she preferred to win distinction by her own merit. She did. From the lecture platform to Congress she went, finally winning the appointment as Minister to Denmark.

Ruth Hanna McCormick (Mrs. Albert G. Simms) was another daughter of a noted statesman (the late Marcus A. Hanna) to make a name for herself in politics. Being interested in a number of industrial and civic problems, she ran for Congress in 1928 and was elected. Two years later she was the Republican nominee for the Senate.

The Lenroots of Wisconsin.

The Lenroots compose a recent father-and-daughter team to achieve distinction along political paths. Judge Irvine L. Lenroot, formerly a Senator, is now of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, while his daughter, Miss Katherine Lenroot, is chief of the Children's Bureau.

The father, beginning his political career as a member of the Wisconsin House of Representatives, eventually became a Senator and subsequently was appointed to his present position. But, meanwhile, the daughter didn't sit back and bask in her father's reflected glory. Obtaining a position in the Children's Bureau, she made her own way under civil service, climbing to the position where she was logical successor to Miss Grace Abbott as chief of the bureau.

The Ropers (Miss Grace Roper and her father, the Secretary of Commerce) constitute another family team high in Government circles. The daughter in this case, however, rose to a position of distinction before her father, for she was an expert in the Internal Revenue Department long before he was appointed Secretary of Commerce.

The late Mrs. C. C. Rumsey (better known as Mary Harriman Rumsey) was another noted daughter of a distinguished man. Edward Henry Harriman achieved renown as a capitalist and financier. His daughter, devoting her attention to varied fields, founded the Junior League, was a notable patron of arts and letters and eventually was appointed chairman of the Consumers' Advisory Council of the NRA.

Follows Father on Stage.

Fathers and daughters achieving fame on the stage are numerous. Cornelia Otis Skinner, now playing in Washington, became interested in the theater because her father, Otis Skinner, won a name for himself behind the footlights. Yet by her own talent and resourcefulness she has won a high place with her dramatic sequences until today she is recognized as one of the foremost women of the theater.

Also in this category is Eva Le Gallienne, who as an actress and as founder-director of the Civic Repertory Theater, has made as eminent a name for herself on the stage as her father, Richard Le Gallienne, has made in the literary field.

Ethel Barrymore, another prominent woman of the theater, also chose a career on the stage because her father, Herbert Blythe (better known as Maurice Barrymore) was a popular actor.

Margaret Anglin, too, is a famous actress and the daughter of a distinguished man. But she did not follow in her father's footsteps in choosing her career. Born in Ottawa, Canada, at the time her father was speaker of the House of Commons, she eventually selected the stage as a profession and won success. In more recent years her work in reviving Greek tragedies has distinguished her as a dramatic artist of rare ability.

Famous in Two Fields.

Rose Hawthorne Lathrop, the daughter of Nathaniel Hawthorne, carved an enviable career in two lines of endeavor. In addition to writing a number of widely published poems, she collaborated with her husband on a biography, "Memories of Hawthorne." But her fame today (nine years after her death) rests largely on her philanthropic work. Being especially interested in the improvement of conditions for suffering and needy people, she established, in 1891, Saint Rose's Free Home for Cancer. She also founded Rosary Hill Home in New York, where she later became head of a Dominican community and directress of a charitable home.

There are scores of other noted women—daughters of famous men—who have achieved distinction. There is, for example, Cosima Wagner, daughter of Franz Liszt. The second wife of Richard Wagner, she became, after her husband's death, the motivating spirit of the Wagner festival at Bayreuth. There is also Mary Crawford Frazer, the English author and daughter of Thomas Crawford, the sculptor. And there is Clara Clemens (Mrs. Ossip Gabrilowitsch) whose biography, "My Father, Mark Twain," has received much favorable criticism.

Tribute Is Paid Modern Girl's Intelligence

Has More Inquiring Mind Than Predecessor, Says College Head.

BOSTON, Jan. 24 (AP).—The average college girl of today has a more inquiring mind than her predecessor of 50, 25 or even 15 years ago, in the opinion of Miss Ellen Fitz Pendleton, president of Wellesley College. The average college girl will not accept unquestioningly every opinion handed her; she has an intellectual curiosity which is the basis of knowledge, says Miss Pendleton, who will leave the college in June, 1936, after serving a quarter century as its head. She was a student there 50 years ago.

Interested in Public Affairs.

Referring to her own college days, Miss Pendleton said:

"The situation was entirely different. I think the modern college girl is much more serious minded than 25 years ago, or even 15 years ago. As a group, she is very much interested in public affairs. Her interest in history, economics and political science is evidence of this.

"The college girl of today is more involved in a greater variety of activities than her predecessors, but she is able to take them along with her academic work. I think she makes more use of the education she receives and is more interested in relating her college work to something she has to do later on than the college girls of previous generations. She has on the whole more intellectual curiosity than the girl of 15 years ago and, after all, that is the basis for acquiring knowledge."

No mother to guide him when he struggles into his clothes. But this 3-year-old doesn't mind. He's been taught at a nursery school to dress himself. This is only one of several ways in which the nursery schools teach children independence.

Fate of Nursery School Setup Worries Dr. Davis

Federal Bureau Specialist Believes Program Financed by FERA Is as Valuable to Nation and Parents as to Children.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

NURSERY SCHOOLS in the United States until a year ago were neatly divided into two classes—those for wealthy children and those for poor children. Those for the latter group were simply day nurseries with enlarged programs of activity. Pre-school age boys and girls in middle class families had to get along without opportunities provided by the nurseries to learn emotional control and social adjustment.

Then along came the Federal Emergency Relief Administration with funds for establishing free nursery schools with highly trained staffs throughout the country. But the fate of this project when FERA funds are eventually withdrawn is already worrying Dr. Mary Dabney Davis, senior specialist in nursery-kindergarten-primary education for the United States Office of Education.

In her opinion the widespread nursery school program is as valuable to the Nation and to parents as it is to the children themselves.

More Freedom Needed.

"It was the need of young mothers for more freedom which gave the movement impetus in this country," Dr. Davis said yesterday at her office in the Hurley-Wright Building. "Women today want time to earn money or to develop cultural and recreational activities. They can go about these things happily when they know their children are receiving the best of care. Usually the mothers realize too that the children enjoy themselves more when they are brought into contact with other boys and grils and are supervised by highly sensitive psychologists."

The Nation derives its benefit from the nursery school program in the building of good citizens, strong bodies, healthy minds, and a desire for independence, Dr. Davis explained.

Younsters of 3 and 4 years of age are taught in the schools to dress themselves, to amuse themselves and feed themselves. Parents as well as children are taught by the nursery school staff.

The work among the parents consists in teaching them about nutrition, physical care, mental guidance and such practical things as what kind of clothes, dishes and furniture to provide for their children.

The Value of Reasoning.

Clothes with zipper fastenings or with large button-holes and slippery buttons are advised as they assist the child in dressing himself. Furniture should be constructed close to the floor so little arms can get into cupboards.

"Mothers have little difficulty in seeing the advantage of such tangible things," Dr. Davis said, "but sometimes it's extremely difficult to teach them the value of reasoning with their children or in spending a lot of time and exercising a lot of patience in trying to understand them. Often the youngster who asks a multitude of questions is simply trying to establish social contact with an adult. Most so-called annoying habits of children have similar explanations if parents will only take the time and trouble to learn them."

Corporeal punishment in Dr. Davis' opinion is always an admission of defeat on the part of the parent who inflicts it. She believes most mothers and fathers wait until their children are too old before trying to reason with them.

"The age of reason begins almost at birth," she declared. "Failure to use it to advantage is the fault of the parents, not of the children. But the parents are learning. If we can only keep the nursery schools we will be able to educate them along with the boys and girls."

Professor Urges Gaudier Make-up For Modern Girls

Woman's craze for cosmetics is not due to a desire to appear youthful but rather to an urge for decoration. So says Professor Curt J. Ducasse, of Brown University.

Speaking before the Rhode Island Philosophical Society recently Professor Brown advocated a wider and more daring use of color in feminine make-up.

"If women were fully conscious of the decorative use of cosmetics," he said, "they would take much fuller advantage than they do of the resources at their disposal. Why not have blue, green or golden fingernails as well as pink or red? And why not green or blue or golden lips, eyebrows, cheeks or ears? Especially with the addition of colored wigs to match, some wonderful color effects could be achieved."

Mrs. H. T. Baldwin Presents Views at Hearing on Security Bill.

"IN ANY KIND of economic security program provision should be made for the serious economic hazard incidental to the birth of children," Mrs. Harris T. Baldwin declared yesterday at the House hearing on the economic security bill. "Since there are over 2,000,000 babies born every year, perhaps no other preventive effort in the economy program will mean more to so great a number of families." Mrs. Baldwin spoke on behalf of the National League of Women Voters, of which she is first vice president.

She further said, "The League welcomes the proposal of Federal aid for maternal and child health combined with participation by the States. We know that the Children's Bureau is equipped to give at once thoroughly competent direction to this program because of its 22 years of research and leadership on maternal and child health and on their relation to the social and economic welfare of the child. We are glad to see that the bill calls for the active participation by the States through the requirement of matching State appropriations because the States must increasingly carry the responsibility of giving actual service to the women and children within their borders."

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Do you believe the majority of married men don't play fair with their wives? I'm beginning to think they don't. I'm a rather old-fashioned girl, 23 years old, and engaged to be married. I have a job and my fiance is out of the town a great deal, as his work requires him to travel.

* * * *

I'm not very pretty, don't talk much, and have never flirted with a man in my life. But somehow married men get the notion they would like to go out with me. I have had to shun the advances of seven married men who work in the same organization with me, and have said "no" repeatedly when they asked me for dates. I know the wives of three of them. Wouldn't you think they would have more respect for their wives, or for their own positions, than to do a thing like that? Not to mention respect for a girl who has never done or said a thing that would lead them to suppose she would go with a married man.

* * * *

Every one of these men is the father of children. One of them has only been married two years, and his wife is a close friend of a sister of mine. I should think he would be afraid I would say something about his proposals that would get back to his wife. But he doesn't seem to think of that.

* * * *

Having to deal constantly with this sort of thing makes me hesitate to get married myself. Of course, I think my fiance is the finest, most loyal and trustworthy man alive, and that he wouldn't look at another woman, but I suppose the wives of these other men think the same thing. Is there such a thing as a completely trustworthy man, in your opinion?
OLD FASHIONED.

Traditional Behavior.

DEAR OLD FASHIONED: It's my opinion the average married man can no more resist the temptation to flirt a bit with an attractive woman than the average woman can resist studying her image in a convenient mirror. The reaction is dictated by a combination of vanity and curiosity, I suppose, and is one of those human idiosyncrasies which we must learn to accept with philosophic good humor and understanding.

* * * *

Probably these men would be as surprised and, in a subconscious way, as disappointed in you if you said "yes" to one of their invitations, as you are surprised and disappointed in their extending them. Your faithful adherence to a high standard of strictly conventional conduct is very likely your greatest charm for them. They're irresistibly attracted by the woman who can and does say "no" to opportunities to make a fool of herself and of them.

* * * *

Furthermore, the average married man has a special niche in his life and his affections which is reserved for his wife alone. His lightly flirtatious reactions to other women do not, according to traditional masculine code, transgress in the slightest on his possessive, protective feeling of loyalty to her.

* * * *

A necessary part of the personality equipment of a business woman, nowadays, is understanding men well enough to make allowances for their traditional standard of behavior away from the hearthside, without subscribing to or endorsing them. There are a great many trustworthy men, if you know how to evaluate them. M. H.

Test of True Humility Seen in Times of Fortune

The test of true humility comes in times of good fortune instead of in times of trouble, the Rev. George Paull T. Sargent, D. D., rector of St. Bartholomew's Church, in New York, believes.

"It is no great thing to be humble when you are brought low but to be humble when you are praised is a great and rare attainment," said Dr. Sargent when the centennial anniversary of the church was celebrated recently.

"Humility, gentleness and meekness are not born with us. We must seek them out," he added.

Clinging Evening Gowns Rule Palm Beach Styles

PALM BEACH, Fla., Jan. 30 (AP). Sophisticated, form-clinging evening gowns have found hearty favor in this Southern resort city, as the effeminate trend turns from fluffy-ruffles.

Soft materials that cling and accent graceful lines have added alluring detail to the smart woman.

The robe de style in chiffon, maline or net enhances the star-canopied dance patios of the winter colony and lend charm to the inclosed ballrooms.

Printed satins in soft pastel shades, with long-sleeved jackets of the same material have found ready wearers, and modern versions of the polonaise recall the social whirl of the seventies. One-piece frocks with skirt of one material and jacketlike tops of another bring back the nalvety of the nineties. A picture of contrast is effected with a white organza skirt that may whirl beneath a black taffeta bodice made with short, simulated peplum and tiny sleeves. Another favorite is the black velvet skirt with a top of white satin.

Blue Still Favored.

Skirts on all evening frocks fit snugly to the knee with figure-firmness, then take a sudden flare; backs are low and sleeves long—in unusual combination. Fur also is being brought into wide use, usually adorning jackets that match the dance frocks.

Full length and three-quarter evening wraps have failed to displace the ever-popular short over-jacket. Velvets with fox collars are the most popular; and many have miniature zipper-muffs to match. Some of the newest coats are of taffeta, form-fitting and flaring. Sleeves are melon-shaped at the top, with a touch of elegance in Elizabethan collars.

Low Heel Sandal Popular.

Dancers may choose between the high and low heel sandals. With many the low heel Roman sandal is popular. Stockings are the merest cobwebs, and, without reinforcements at the toe, allow the silver or lacquered toenail to gleam through. Most of the shoes are merely twining straps on soles; the straps may be of sequins, gros grain, ribbon or velvet.

Costume jewelry resembles genuine stones in coloring and brilliance; and attractive colored bead bracelets are in emerald, ruby and sapphire stones. Small rhinestone clip earrings have replaced in popularity the long ear pendants.

What Today Means

"Aquarius."

IF JANUARY 31 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m., from 2:30 to 4:30 p. m. and from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 9:30 a. m., from 4:30 to 6:30 p. m. and from 9:30 to 11:30 p. m.

On this January 31 complications are liable to arise if, instead of dealings with actual facts or figures, surmises are indulged in, so exercise discretion.

If a woman and January 31 is your birthday, your engaging type of personality should be a valuable asset both in a social and a business way. It might be well to bear in mind that light or frivolous conversation can become just as tiresome as overindulging in serious topics. Moderation in expression should gain you the reputation of being an excellent conversationalist.

If a man and January 31 is your natal day, you should make a splendid insurnace or real estate agent, with your convincing conversational powers. An artistic nature may, however, make you more interested in things of beauty than those of prosaic worth. Poetry, sculptoring, writing and music may appeal to you more than selling, teaching or mercantile pursuits which might offer a more practical and profitable medium of activity. Matrimony should bring many of life's greatest blessings to you. Bachelor solitude is likely to have a depressing effect on one who requires someone of a sympathetic and understanding nature to whom confidences can be made, and from whom encouragement can be received.

Tribal Medicine Man Is Judge, Jury

Accused Given Poison in Trial by Ordeal.

It's the medicine man who decides upon the innocence or guilt of an accused person in those African tribes which still hold trial by ordeal. The ordeal consists in making the accused gulp a cup of poison.

If he becomes violently ill he is adjudged guilty and is then beaten to death. If he dies from the effects of the poison he is also considered guilty. But if his stomach throws off the mixture, then he is considered innocent. The poteney of the potion, however, depends upon the medicine man. If he thinks the accused is guilty he administers a powerful dose. If he thinks the accused is innocent he gives him a harmless drink.

New Felt Hat Brings Wearer 'Sunny Skies'

By Ruth Anne Davis.

DON'T WAIT any longer. Top off the winter season with a bonnie new felt sports hat. And don't waste shoe leather and let yourself in for shopper's fatigue by "doing the town" for your hat. Take a hint from this and call just as soon as you can on the hat department of a certain downtown store. Ask to see the brand new felts which have just come in. In this case you come, you see, and you buy. They're irresistible!

The designer of the smart little hats started out with an idea. She wanted to tell of happy days and sunny skies, through the medium of hats. And she succeeded. In fact, her success was so obvious that she even gave the dapper little felts appealing titles such as "Sunny Skies," "Sportster," "Happy Days," etc.

These hats are appropriate for both now and then. You'll enjoy one—or two—or as many as you buy—for several months to come.

A New Bath Brush.

For a quick treatment with an exhilarating aftermath, use a bath brush and give yourself a body massage while you are taking your tub. There's a certain new bath brush with a long handle which is especially grand for this purpose. Its soft, very fine white bristles do their work well and yet do not prove irritating to the skin. They are closely grouped so that the water will not spatter.

The long handle, especially designed to fit the back, is ideal for massaging the shoulders and down the spine; the shape of the handle permits a firm hold and does not slip in your grasp. It is easily detachable from the oval head of the brush which has a reinforced linen strap for slipping it on the hand while massaging.

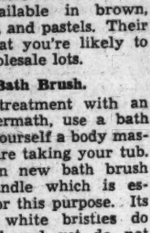
Clogged pores, scales and little horny plugs which often develop around the opening of the hair follicles are removed when treated regularly to a good scrubbing with the brush.

Brushing is particularly effective for arousing the circulation and giving the skin a rosy glow of health. It is an indispensable aid in freeing the skin of its accumulation during a day of activity.

Rough knees, calloused elbows and pebbly back are coaxed into a state of satin-smoothness to say nothing of the clean-stimulating effect the use of a bath brush has on the body as a whole.

Indelible Lipstick.

Women who are in the market for a truly indelible lipstick which comes in a fascinating two-colored case owe it to themselves to try the one displayed now in an F street store. This is a French lipstick, and say those who know, a great favorite with the Parisian grande dames.



Rub it over the lips ever so lightly and it imparts a devastating crimson, scarlet, or whatever shade you have chosen.

One of the best features of this dainty toiletry is its refill. You buy it now along with a refill for the same price you'd ordinarily pay for the lipstick alone. In reality, you see, you're really getting two lipsticks for the price of one—and two incomparable lipsticks.

Gay Cruise Hankies.

It's a gala section in a local store where the gay and sprightly cruise hankies are hanging from their racks like small bright flags.

These come in large and small sizes, in practically all colors, and in designs featuring anchors, pilot wheels, stars, and numerous other nautical symbols.

Vacuum Filler Fountain Pens.

What a joy, the new transparent vacuum filler fountain pens! You can tell from one peek whether there's ink or not, and just how much ink there is.

These pens are made from a lightweight composition that is striped like peppermint candy. They come only in gray and black. The price—$1.

Modernistic Beach Towels.

For those who aren't worrying about the weather here because they are southward bound for warm and balmy beaches, there are some irresistible beach towels in a downtown store. These, true to the times, are modernistic in design. One side is a solid color, the other a contrasting shade with diagonal stripes.

Twin Sweater Sets.

One dollar and ninety-five cents is very little to pay for attractive twin sweater sets. If you're interested in this jaunty and warm wearing apparel drop in a certain local store and take a look. Here you'll find them in combinations of brown and rust, blue and brown, yellow and brown, black and blue, and, most flattering of all, black and white.

The sweaters are made of a soft "woolly" wool that despite their tailored style gives them a definitely feminine appeal.

Pattern No. 798.

FOR AFTERNOON tea, bridge, or informal dining, the short-sleeved crepe frock in one of the new deep pastels is exactly right. Formal, but not fussy, it strikes just the right note of casual importance. Jeweled clips add a bit of glitter to the neckline, and the soft simplicity of the bias skirt and crushed girdle is typical of the spring fashion trend.

In one of the many new "surface interest" crepes, particularly matelasse or cloque weaves, the simple lines help dramatize the interesting texture of the fabric. In size 18 (36) it requires 3¼ yards of 39-inch material. The sizes are 14 to 42.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

The Diet Factor in Gallstones.

FOR many years debate has waxed and waned as to the origin of gallstones. There are many who believe that infection is the basic cause; that bacterial growths causing inflammation bring about a deposit of solid material from the bile. On the other hand many gall bladders in which there is no evidence of infcetion or inflammation are found to contain gallstones.

Other investigators hold that failure of the gall bladder to empty normally is a prominent factor. Whenever the gall bladder does not contract rhythmically, as in normal health, the condition known as stasis (similar to constipation) results. This may be followed by infection or by a slowing down of the secretion of bile. When bile is stagnant in the gall bladder certain changes occur. The bile becomes more concentrated, and substances held in solution when plenty of fluid is present are precipitated.

Gallstones are of two general types: (1) those composed of cholesterol and (2) those composed of calcium and bile pigments. In some gallstones both chemical compounds are present. A very high percentage of all gallstones are of the first variety and we may understand the frequent formation of cholesterol stones from the fact that this substance is found in the bile.

The source of cholesterol is not entirely clear. However, it is known that it comes from fats and from the breaking down of body cells, especially the red blood cells. It increases markedly in the blood in kidney disease and in diabetes. Inasmuch as the body apparently attempts to excrete it via the liver, the reason for its presence in the bile is clear.

Whenever an individual undergoes a rapid reduction in weight large quantities of stored up cholesterol are liberated, with the result that the blood takes up a high concentration of this substance. It is therefore important that all persons following a reducing diet make certain that the gall bladder is active during this period, as more cholesterol in the bile than normal may mean the beginning of gallstones.

The adult body needs but a relatively small amount of cholesterol and most of us take in entirely too much with our food. Among the substances high in cholesteral are brain, liver, kidney, sweetbreads, fish roe and egg yolk. For example, egg yolk contains ten times as much cholesterol as butter, 20 times as much as chicken, and nearly 30 times as much as lean beef.

Although fat in the diet stimulates indirectly the contraction of the gall bladder it should not be given in any appreciable quantity to patients who have infected gall bladders or gallstones. In general the dietary plan for patients with any type of gall bladder disease should include small, regular meals, each followed by a half hour of rest. All foods that possess tough fibers, including raw vegetables, and fried and highly seasoned foods should be avoided. Starches, sugars, fruit juices, cereals, and plenty of lean meat should form the nucleus of the diet. Water should be taken freely but no more than the ordinary amount with meals. Six to eight glasses in each 24 hours, in addition to the routine water consumption, is advised.

Ancient Recipe Used by Indians For Corn Dish

WANT A RECIPE for hulled corn, cured as the Indians in Michigan have been curing it since long before the white man came? Here's the way the Indians prepare the corn:

First they collect hardwood and burn it in stoves that have been carefully cleaned. Then the hardwood ashes are carefully gathered and placed in a large kettle so that they take up about one-fourth of the kettle's capacity. On top of the ashes is placed dry field corn. The rest of the space is filled with water.

The kettle is then heated slowly and the mixture is stirred frequently. When it reaches the boiling point it is removed from the fire, as the hulls crack at this stage. The corn is next washed through many waters to cleanse it thoroughly of ashes.

The Indians then dry the corn until it is hard. To make it ready for cooking they soak it overnight and parboil it slightly. Usually they cook it with salt pork and brown beans, making a variety of succotash.

West opened his fourth best diamond, East being permitted to hold the Jack. When the deuce came back, declarer stepped right up with the Ace, since it was evident that East had no more diamonds. The Queen of hearts was led and allowed to ride to East's King, the beginning of a now standard safety play. At this point East made the fatal error of leading the Queen of clubs, which dummy won with the King, permitting a return finesse. The ten of hearts was pushed through and it made no difference whether West covered or not. On the third round of hearts East discarded a club. On the fourth round to discard a spade would establish dummy's long spade and to discard a club would establish declarer's four-spot. He finally chose the spade, declarer making a safe spade discard, and then ran the rest of the tricks, since the spades broke.

British Factory To Open School For Juveniles

BOY AND GIRL industrial workers in England are having a school built especially for them at Birmingham by a manufacturing firm. This is the first time juvenile employes in England have been provided for along this line.

The young workers will be paid wages while they are attending the school. Their classes will consist of learning factory jobs.

Boys will have a choice of woodwork, riveting, painting, wheelmaking, erecting, and assembling. Girls may take up sewing, upholstering and hoodmaking.

If one of the pupils starts a course and then fails to make normal progress or is unhappy in the work, he may change until he finds the course which best suits him.

One of the ideas back of the project is to curtail "blind-alley" occupations which are usually due to workers' lack of interest.

Child Chats

By Alice Fox Pitts.

EVERY MOTHER has been advised to give the small child the opportunity to become acquainted with the family doctor and familiar with his instruments, so that he will know no fear when the time comes for a professional visit from the physician. The same plan can be adapted beneficially to lesser ordeals, like going to the barber, for instance.

It is not uncommon to see mother and the barber struggling to keep a screaming child in the chair for a hair cut. Since the process is painless there is no sense in letting a child develop such a fear. The way to avoid it is to take him along when the older children go to have their hair cut. Let him watch the scissors go "snip, snip, snip." Show him the mirrors where the person in the chair can see the back of his head as well as the front. Pique his interest in the affair, and when the time comes to have his hair cut, he will welcome it as a rare treat instead of an ordeal.

Pre-Natal Care Boon to Mothers

As a result of modern methods of prenatal care, the Frontier Nursing Service in the Kentucky mountains has not lost a single mother out of 2,000 in the last eight years, the director of the service announced recently.

In addition to providing medical attention, the service also tries to educate the mountaineers in social procedure. Evidence of progress along this line was noted at a Christmas party when the men guests agreed to put their pistols in the kitchen for the duration of the entertainment. The mountain families are also increasing their volunteer visits to the service's clinics.

Meal Planning For Visitors Is a Problem

Simple Menus Should Be Served but Have Them Well Balanced.

By Dorothea Duncan.

HERE IS the Washington hostess' greatest problem—"How shall I plan to show my out-of-town guests points of interest here and still not neglect the meals I must prepare for them?" This problem faces the woman particularly who has recently moved here from another part of the country, because all the friends and relatives back home feel this is the chance of a lifetime to visit someone they know in the Nation's Capital.

The guests may fall into two classes—the unexpected and the invited. The unexpected ones no doubt will make a brief sojourn, but the invited ones may spend a week or two, therefore the latter group are going to be the ones that create the greatest problem for the hostess, as far as entertaining and meal planning.

The emergency pantry shelf will always take care of the unexpected visitor who pops in for an overnight stay or just before meal time. However, the invited guests, who are bound to see all the four corners of the Capital, can not very well be satisfied with a series of menus supplied by the well-known pantry shelf.

Formulate a Program.

If you are expecting to invite numerous friends to visit you, and your time must be encroached upon for sightseeing as well as extra kitchen duties, try to formulate a plan of procedure before the guests arrive. In the first place, in a very tactful way suggest to your guests that they arrive at a time when you can give them the most attention. Have a specific time for them to arrive, not necessarily the hour, but be sure of the day. Then you can plan your household duties, your marketing and your menus in advance.

A reliable grocer somewhere not too far from your home will help no end. He will see that your orders are carefully checked before they are sent out and that they arrive on time. The grocer will know what kind of food you prefer and know your standards of food quality, so that it will be possible for you to order by phone the days you are too busy to go to the store and select your own groceries.

Now for the menus. Serve the simplest meals that you can and still have them well balanced. Breakfast will be no problem, but luncheon and dinner may be. For luncheon, remember, that a good soup, a simple salad, bread, a beverage and a dessert are adequate. Before your guests arrive why not fill all the available cookie jars with the type of cookies that keep well. Cookies and fruit make an excellent dessert, and take little or no time. Plain salads of greens with a change of dressing are not as monotonous as some of the more elaborate ones. If you feel the necessity for a fruit or vegetable salad, remember that in a pinch canned ones are very desirable, if properly drained and chilled and served with a dressing that will enhance their flavor. Don't forget the wide range of soups that your grocer carries. Even in the spring or summer soup is desirable, especially if it is the only hot dish of the meal. Canned meats and fish, particularly chicken, salmon and tuna are palatable if creamed or made into salad, and served as admirable luncheon pickups.

Oven Dinners Save Time.

The first dinner enjoyed by the guests may be a little elaborate if you have the time to give to the preparation. A baked ham will be a wise choice for the meat course for more reasons than one. The ham will have very little waste and after it has been served hot for dinner it will provide a cold meat for a later luncheon. Steaks and chops, of course, take so short a time to cook that they may be included once during the time the guests stay, or possibly twice if they are not too expensive for the budget. Oven dinners will be a great time-saver, especially if you serve a roast of beef (pot roast of chuck or round are as palatable as the rib or sirloin) which has been cooked with carrots, potatoes or other vegetables surrounding it. This will relieve you from several pans to be washed, and the entire dinner may be put into the oven and forgotten for several hours.

Ice cream is always a popular and inexpensive dessert. You can make up a quantity of butterscotch, chocolate or a similar sauce and store it in the refrigerator and have it on hand to serve with ice cream.

Vegetables will perhaps take up most of your time, if you are using fresh ones. However, if you find that with your extra duties, preparing fresh vegetables is taking too much valuable time, fall back on a few of the canned ones that you feel are not changed in flavor by the canning process.

Remember that simple meals well cooked will do a great deal more to satisfy your guests and build your reputation as a good hostess, than elaborate ones poorly put together.

Woman Walks 34,000 Miles—Adds 45 Pounds

She resigned yesterday as one of the few women mail carriers in the United States, having walked approximately 34,000 miles since starting her route in 1920.

"And," she observed, "I weigh 45 pounds more than when I started nearly 15 years ago."

AIR STEWARDESS

By VIDA HURST

When Dr. Bartlett Ralston breaks their engagement, Irene Gardner turns to the career of air stewardess to forget. Seeing no harm in having a date with a pilot, she goes out with Tom Merrit. His cocky lovemaking leaves her cold, and she determines not to date him again.

Another air stewardess, Virginia Cathcart, invites Irene to share an apartment with her and Eve Meadows, who is chronically in love. Virginia's devotion to her fiance, Bill Naughton, intensifies Irene's own heartache. When Eve tearfully confesses to Irene that she loves Bill, Irene sensibly tells her to forget it. Eve being alone, had telephoned Bill and asked him to spend the evening with her, but he excused himself, pleading that he was going to bed with a cold. Later Eve called his hotel, and found he hadn't been in.

A few days later, Virginia announces to Irene, "What do you suppose has happened now?"

"IT SEEMS that Eve has been checking up on my darling!" Virginia said, lighting a cigarette.

Irene had suspected it. She had been certain that Eve would not rest until she told Virginia about Bill's absence from his hotel.

"I'm not at all disturbed about what Bill was doing that Saturday night," declared Virginia. "What interests me is what reason did Eve have for telephoning him at 3 o'clock?"

"I wonder if that was all there was to it," Virginia continued doubtfully. "You know if I thought she had a secret yen for him it would explain a lot of things."

"Don't worry about it," Irene advised.

"Worry about it?" repeated the other air hostess with one of her rare smiles. "Listen, darling, if Eve Meadows is crazy about Bill it's going to be just too bad for her."

Warning Offered.

"How can she be so confident?" Irene thought.

"You can't be sure of any man outside of matrimony. Engagements can always be broken," she warned.

"Thanks for the good advice, but I'm not afraid of Eve or any other woman."

Looking at her radiant face, Irene decided anyone with sense would prefer her to Eve even if Eve was more beautiful. But men were so fickle and Virginia so trusting it made Irene fear for her. That was exactly the way she used to feel about Bart. No one in the world could have convinced her that Bart would ever break their engagement. Thank goodness, she would be working again tomorrow. Those hours in the air were the only ones when she could be sure of forgetting her troubles.

There was a new pilot on the plane for Los Angeles. Irene had heard some of the other girls speak of Barney O'Sullivan, but she had not seen him until that morning. His face was as Irish as his name. Audacious, laughing.

When he met her, he said, "Oh, yes, I've been hearing about you."

"Nothing but good, I trust."

"On the contrary, it is very bad. Most discouraging to an enterprising pilot."

Irene couldn't imagine what he meant, but they had no further opportunity for conversation. The plane had taxied up the runway and paused before the airport waiting for passengers.

Although it was only 8:40, the plane was full this morning. There were the usual timid old lady who had never been on a plane before, and a number of business men absorbed in their newspapers. There were, also, a couple of youthful musicians returning to their own city, a man and his wife, and another passenger who had been drinking.

When she took his ticket, he said, "Hello, there, sister! Pretty nifty little uniform you're wearing."

Irene knew the type, being similar, even to the words he used, to those patients in the hospital who were scarcely out from the anesthetic before they attempted to flirt with her. She answered pleasantly and decided to avoid any future conversation with him, but he summoned her back.

"What's the chance of your having a little snifter with me?"

"That's very nice of you," she replied, "but drinking on the plane is forbidden."

"We're both sitting in the back. No one can see."

"I'm sorry,' she repeated, "but we can't do it."

"What do you mean we can't? Speak for yourself, sister! I'm having a drink."

"The company does not permit drinking on board the planes," she insisted cheerfully. "I'm sure if you think it over, you can understand the necessity for such a rule."

In Fighting Mood.

"No blankety blank air line is going to tell me what I can do," he said, belligerently.

Hoping to avoid a scene, Irene said no more, but went on about her duties. When she glanced at him again, she saw that he had taken a bottle from his pocket and was drinking from it.

There was no use talking to him. Argument with anyone in his condition would be futile. Without saying another word she went to the cockpit and opened the door.

"There's a passenger who insists upon drinking," she reported.

The copilot grinned and Barney inquired gayly, "Did you tell him he couldn't?"

"Yes, but he wouldn't pay any attention to me. He is already drunk."

Barney turned the controls over to the copilot. "Where is he?"

"In the back sitting across from me."

Pilot Was Gentle.

Irene followed the pilot's tall young figure as he strode through the cabin to the rear seat.

"I'm very sorry," he said gently, "but drinking aboard the planes is against the company's rules."

"Is that so?" returned the other. "If you'll let me have that bottle, I'll see that you get it back just as soon as we reach Los Angeles," the pilot promised.

"Oh, you will? And who do you think you are?"

"I happen to be in command of this ship," the pilot answered. "And I'm asking you to give me that bottle."

"Well, try to get it, you smart little . . ."

The words were scarcely out of his mouth before a blow from Barney caught him squarely on the chin. Irene gasped. It had happened so quickly that the other passengers hadn't even been disturbed. As the man slumped in his seat the pilot took the bottle and placed it in his pocket.

No Help Needed.

"I'll send Johnny back to see that he doesn't start anything," he said calmly.

But the assistance of the copilot was not necessary. When the inebriated passenger recovered consciousness, he was too ill to do anything but hold the air hostess' hand. Irene took care of him, chuckling inwardly.

Barney waited until he was inside the station, then burst into laughter.

"There's one tough guy who has learned a lesson."

"You certainly did a good job of it," she commented. "I don't think another passenger on the plane knew what was happening."

Irene was gathering up her things preparatory to leaving.

"How about a game of tennis this afternoon?" Barney said casually. "There's a court here you know."

"I haven't anything to wear."

Lunch at Airport.

"I know one of the stenos who will be glad to lend you her things. She keeps them out here all the time and you're about the same size."

Irene thanked him and went inside the airport for lunch. Afterward, Barney presented her with the necessary clothes. Irene was glad of a chance to play. She was not tired and the plane did not leave until four.

The tennis court, inside the hangar at a short distance from the station, was cool and shaded from the July sun. Idle planes surrounded them like huge disabled beetles but, except for a mechanic testing a motor in a distant corner, the place was deserted as the two young people sent the balls spinning across the net.

"By Golly, I though I could play tennis, but you've convinced me that I can't," Barney cried, mopping a dripping forehead. "Where did you learn to serve like that?"

"Hard-Hearted Hannah."

Side by side they were strolling through the great empty building.

"Is that where you learned all your accomplishments?" he teased the pilot.

"I didn't know I had any others."

"Well, of course, I'm new on the line, but I understand your resistance to the pilot and copilot hazard is practically perfect."

"What do you mean?"

"They call you "Hard-hearted Hannah," he murmured, " but in matters like that I never take another person's word for it."

Without further warning, the girl was lifted from the floor, then gently lowered until merry Irish lips met her own.

Mexico Bares Plot Upon Rule; To Corral Foes

Proposed Revolt Financed With U. S. Money, Officials State.

Mexico, D. F., Jan. 30 (AP).—A widespread round-up of opponents of President Lazaro Cardenas' government was believed imminent tonight as federal agents laid bare plans for an uprising they said was financed with United States money.

Two agents who won the confidence of the alleged conspirators said they had information that Gen. Antonio Villarreal, defeated candidate in the November presidential elections, who is now in the United States, offered to assume the military leadership of the movement "without demanding complete control."

Documents found in the homes and offices of the alleged plotters were said to implicate many persons whose arrest was believed imminent. Already in custody were 18 persons implicated, the government said, by documents which revealed that the plot was hatched in the United States.

A fund of $300,000, contributed by persons in the United States, was behind the movement, the federal agents charged, and recruits were sought in Durango Province with the promise that they would be given "plenty of guns and money."

The war department, in announcing that the uprising was scheduled for February, named as leaders Gilberto Valenzuela and Gen. Marcelo Caraveo, both now in El Paso, Tex.; Gen. Villarreal and Enrique Vasconcelos, cousin of Jose Vasconcelos, who was formerly prominent in Mexico's political life.

Those arrested, all of whom denied any seditious activities, included Alberto M. Gonzales Vasquez, former director of customs.

The two federal operatives, who said they won the conspirators' confidence so completely that they were allowed to go to El Paso and confer with Valenzuela, said Jose Acuna Pardo, former army officer, was in charge of military plans for the revolt.

Uruguay Army To Stem Rebels

Fierce BattleBetween3,000 Loyalists, 2,500 in Revolt Looms Near Border.

Montevideo, Uruguay, Jan. 30 (U.P.). Fighting in the north with a major battle believed inevitable between 2,500 rebels and 3,000 loyal government troops near the Brazilian border was reported in advices from the front tonight in the revolution against President Gabriel Terra.

The major battle was expected in the Cerro Chato region, farthest north of the national capital. The revolutionists were reported to be well armed and with provisions for a siege.

The government, in a determined drive to smash the revolution, rushed artillery and air force units into the northern war zone to obliterate the rebels in a swift campaign before they have a chance to push into the south and menace Montevideo.

Persons asking for safe transportation were informed the government was unable to guarantee their arrival at any destination in Uruguay. Panic spread in the capital, with increasing nervousness apparent on all sides.

The government announced 300 rebel suspects had been arrested in Montevideo, while 1,000 in all have been rounded up in wholesale raids throughout Uruguay.

Soldiers in Chaco Kill Selves to End Thirst, Says Cleric

Santiago, Chile, Jan. 30 (AP).—A Colombian priest has arrived here from the Chaco with tales of seeing soldiers in the war between Paraguay and Bolivia commit suicide to end their thirst.

Father Alfonso Zawadsky, of Cali and Bogota, Colombia, has come to the west coast from the theater of the fighting in the interior of South America.

"The soldiers' suicidal tendencies can not be stopped," the priest said. "The thirst devours their throats, dries up their eyes, parches their tongue and kills them like flies.

"At Picuiba, 5,000 Bolivian soldiers died of thirst. At Canada el Carmen, 1,600 expired. These deaths are in addition to the daily, known victims of the cannon, gases and hand grenades.

"I have been along some of the roads at the front where the wind blows up great clouds of the Chaco dust so fine that the soldiers say it penetrates 'even to their thoughts.'"

Jane Cooke, Husband Honeymoon in Georgia

Brunswick, Ga., Jan. 30 (AP).—A hotel here was the honeymoon rendezvous today of Mr. and Mrs. George Scarlette, whose elopement and marriage in Washington brought considerable concern to the family of the bride, Mr. and Mrs. Howard de Walden Cooke, of fashionable Chevy Chase, Md.

Scarlette, who until the wedding was the Cooke family chauffeur, and his bride, the former Miss Jane Cooke, were accompanied by Mrs. Scarlette's sister, Miss Anna Cooke, when they registered at the hotel today.

The newlyweds refused to answer the telephone and other efforts to communicate to them Mrs. Cooke's willingness to attempt to drop a warrant against her son-in-law if he would return $5,000 worth of jewelry she contends he stole, were unsuccessful.

The Federal Diary

(Trade-Mark Applied For.)

By Morgan Baker

WITH full pay restored by the Senate and House Federal employe organizations are now able to devote undivided attention toward other and equally vital matters for improving personnel conditions.

BAKER.

Restoration of annual leave, extension and strengthening of the merit system and removal of the ban on promotions are regarded by the rank and file as the most important of these matters.

The two major employe leaders last night expressed satisfaction at the House result.

"In joining the Senate in voting full restoration of Federal pay as of April 1, 1935, the House has pursued a constructive course dictated by every aspect of Federal wage and personnel conditions. Senate and House now have voiced emphatically their recognition of the injustice done to Federal workers, and of the anomalous position in which the Federal Government has been placed by its deflationary wage policy.

Merit System Cited.

"* * * With this legislation disposed of, it is now possible for the National Federation to devote all of its energies to other vitally needed reforms, especially with respect to the strengthening of the merit system."

E. Claude Babcock, president of the American Federation of Government Employes, said:

"The action of the House on pay restoration, following the example set by the Senate, makes possible the righting of a great wrong.

Mr. Salmon is seen receiving congratulations in his office, while to the right is the large birthday cake that was presented to him.

"President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, has referred to the Government pay cut as indefensible. That indictment was true. So long as the Government itself set the example of pay cutting, employers in private industry in many instances followed that example. The Government, by its own practice, cast doubt upon its recovery program and indicated a lack of confidence in the very means it has prescribed for private industry.

Gov. Earle Demands State Liquor Inquiry

Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 30 (AP).—A demand for a legislative investigation of the State liquor store system was made today by Gov. Earle, and the House of Representatives immediately authorized the inquiry.

In a special message to the House, the chief executive charged that through a "series of secret contracts" the liquor control board had obligated itself to make purchases aggregating $40,000,000, and that because of these alleged "contracts" liquor prices are high in Pennsylvania.

Oyster Bill Opens River To Dredgers

Legislation Designed to Repeal Laws Closing Potomac.

Charles County Liquor Statute Revision Also Proposed.

(Staff Correspondent of The Post).

Annapolis, Jan. 30.—Oyster legislation, always the subject of bitter fights, made its appearance in the Maryland General Assembly today in a pair of measures.

First and most important is the bill designed to throw the Potomac River open to dredgers. The Somerset County delegation in the House, consisting of Mrs. Mayne A. Collins, Glenwood Evans and Carl Hoffman, all Democrats, sponsored the measure which aims to repeal existing laws under which the river has been closed to dredging for a number of years.

This is the same proposal that furnished the spark for an all-night filibuster in the Senate at the 1933 session.

The other oyster bill was presented by Senator J. B. Latimer (Republican), of Calvert County. It would define the eastern boundary of the Patuxent River as a straight line between Cove Point Lighthouse, in Calvert County, and Cedar Point Light, in St. Marys County, and dredging within that area would be prohibited under the act.

Liquor Law Revision Urged.

Revision of the Charles County liquor laws is provided in a bill presented by Senator Robert V. Cooksey (Republican). The proposal would fix May 1 as the date for issuing licenses. The fee would be $100. Violations would be punishable by a fine of $500, and sale of liquors to minors would draw a fine of $50.

Senator Cooksey also placed on file a bill providing a license fee for hucksters in his home county. The fee is fixed at $100 a year, with penalties for violation. The act is directed against outside hucksters, as it would not apply to county farmers selling their own fruit and produce.

A delegation of the State Volunteer Firemen's Association asked Gov. Nice to include in his budget an appropriation for care of injured firemen, and support of their widows and orphans. Both major parties promised such aid during their election campaigns last year. A flat amount of $10,000, coupled with a 1 per cent tax on the business of out-of-State insurance companies, estimated to produce $21,000, is among the plans being discussed.

Emergency Fund Sought.

Senator Robert W. Kimble (Republican), Alleghany County, fathered a proposal authorizing the Mayor and Council of Cumberland to establish a contingent and emergency fund, and another, designed to refuse auto license tags to any car on which Cumberland taxes have not been paid. Under the first bill a fund of $10,000 would be created for the city departments to draw upon, and the mayor and council would be authorized to levy 4 per cent of the city taxe rate as an additional fund to take care of unforeseen capital expenditures. Kimble said his plan would obviate the necessity of the city borrowing from time to time.

The Senate adopted Senator Kimble's resolution requesting the State banking commissioner to furnish information pertaining to small-loan companies, such as rates of interest charges, amount of borrowing done, and salaries of officials. Meanwhile, proposed legislation is now on file that would reduce interest on such loans from 3½ to 2 per cent.

A State-wide measure directed against claw machines was offered by Delegate Webster, Baltimore City. It provides a license of $10 each, and would prohibit operation of such machines within 600 feet of schoolhouses.

Other bills introduced today included:

Senate—Senator J. David Baile (Republican) of Carroll, minority floor leader; Gov. Nice's bill seeking a commission to investigate all State departments and closed banks; Senator W. Frank Every (Democrat), of Baltimore, a measure which would reenact the present law exempting from State taxation steamship companies operating lines outside the Chesapeake Bay.

House—Delegate John F. Webster, jr. (Democrat), of Baltimore, a bill to allow divorce when either party has become permanently and incurably insane; Delegate Philip Miller (Democrat), of Anne Arundel, a measure to prohibit marriages between Negroes and members of the Malay race, and between white persons and members of the Malay race.

Financial Crisis Studied.

Means of raising more than $3,000,000 to meet the financial crisis confront the State government, and introduction of the administration bill creating a special commission to investigate all State departments at a cost estimated at between $120,000 and $250,000, found the Democratic majority in the Assembly arrayed against Gov. Nice.

Soon after introduction of the bill President Lansdale G. Sasscer, of the Senate, reminded the Governor that the Assembly has two inquisitorial groups, empowered to probe anything pertaining to the State. He referred to the grand inquest committees of the Senate and House. Floor Leader Coad termed the movement throwing "good money after bad." He said he spoke from a personal and not political viewpoint, and asserted he would not oppose an inquiry at a nominal cost.

The State finds itself in need of $1,500,000 immediate working capital, and facing a deficit of $2,300,000 by the end of the current fiscal year in September, according to figures furnished by Comptroller William S. Gordy, jr.

Annuity Sale Advocated.

The Democratic Assemblymen, headed by Senator Coad, agreed upon two proposals to meet the situation: sale of the State's annuity in the Northern Central Railway, valued at $1,250,000, and hurried passage of the bill already on file, imposing $1 a barrel tax on beer.

Sale of the annuity was suggested by Comptroller Gordy as an emergency measure. Gov. Nice, while not opposing it, expressed doubt as to the constitutionality of selling for any purpose other than reducing the State debt. Senator Coad and his colleagues, however, maintain that the sale is subject to the will of the Assembly. The Governor and Coad were unable to reach an agreement, so the Senator announced a bill providing for the sale would be prepared immediately.

The beer tax bill, introduced by Senator E. Milton Veasey, Worcester County, already has been approved by committee.

Gov. Nice today appointed J. Cookman Boyd, Baltimore lawyer, as the official representative of Maryland at ceremonies to be held February 17 at the Washington Memorial Chapel at Valley Forge.

The Governor also announced receipt of the resignation of Oliver C. Short as State employment commissioner.

Editor Proposes Senator Glass As Roosevelt's Chief Adviser

"Sun Would Shine" Under Virginia Veteran's Counsel, Fred Fuller Shedd, Philadelphia, Declares in Talk at Mary Baldwin College.

Staunton, Va., Jan. 30 (Spl.).—One requisite necessary for recovery would be supplied "if Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, should be made the chief adviser of the Roosevelt administration," in the opinion of Fred Fuller Shedd, editor of the Philadelphia Bulletin, who spoke here yesterday at Mary Baldwin College:

"The sun would shine and the return of confidence would be guaranteed through the wisdom, dependability, and soundness of leadership of the Virginia Senator. Business enterprises would unlock their safes, take out their money and open up business tomorrow."

The Philadelphian asserted that the depression will be over when confidence returns, and the country will get confidence "when the Administration at Washington sees fit to assure the business men of the country that it is safe to go ahead in the ordinary procedure of business."

This country has suffered from underconsumption, not overproduction," said Mr. Shedd. "People have just been living from hand to mouth—buying just what they had to buy. Business and industry are raring to go, as soon as confidence comes."

The editor said that the "most significant item of news of the last week—and for that matter, the last year—was President Roosevelt's announcement that the Constitution of the United States is not to be set aside by any codes under the NRA, and that the right of free competition has not been waived by the Government or industry.

"The assurance that no dictatorship will supplant the Constitution in this Administration leaves the path open for business and industrial enterprises to forge ahead," he said.

Death Blamed On Sled's Lamp

Driver in Oakland Crash Exonerated; Distracted by Light, He Says.

Oakland, Md., Jan. 30 (AP).—A carbide lamp attached to a sled was blamed by Leslie Ashby for his failure to avoid hitting another sled with his automobile, killing Harold Ott, 9, and injuring Lawrence Welch, 14.

Ashby told a coroner's jury last night he did not see the sled on which Ott and Welch were coasting, because the carbide lamp had attracted his attention, until the sled was in front of his machine.

His statements were corroborated by two witnesses, Miss Mildred King and Mrs. Floyd Leighton. The jury, after deliberating a short time, exonerated Ashby of blame for the fatality, returning a verdict of unavoidable accident.

Ashby also told the jury he failed to see Wilbur Davis, a special city officer, patrolling the coasting area. The officer said he tried to stop Ashby by waving a flashlight and yelling to him.

Young Ott died of a fractured skull, neck and leg. Welch was taken to a Cumberland hospital by his father, Dewey Welch, who required four hours to make the 58-mile trip because of the icy condition of the roads.

Harrisonburg, Va., Jan. 30 (Spl.). Fire partly wrecked the $10,000 home of Postmaster Charles A. Hammer today, causing a loss of $5,000, partly covered by insurance.

A spark or defective flue is believed to have been the cause of the fire. It started in the garret.

The fire brought 500 people to the scene, who rushed in and saved furniture and Mr. Hammer's library. A frozen fire plug delayed the fire companies in pouring water on the flames, which had eaten their way through the shingle roof.

Virginians End HuntingSeason

Duck Scarcity Proves Need for Restrictions, Say Officials.

Richmond, Jan. 30 (AP).—Tomorrow marks the end of the hunting season over most of Virginia and for a majority of varieties of game, although some seasons previously closed.

Discussing the season, Mac D. Hart, executive secretary of game and inland fisheries, said that reports as to bags of game have varied to such an extent that few general statements could be made, but that for the duck hunters, who got in their last shots on January 12, a season of poor hunting had been "a blessing in disguise."

"The scarcity of migratory waterfowl this year," he said, "did more than any amount of talking on our part could have done to convince sportsmen of the need for the stricter regulations put in effect this year."

He expressed the opinion that with this warning and by submitting to some further regulations, hunters may continue to shoot varieties of birds which otherwise were on the verge of extinction.

Tunnel Under Bay To Kent Isle Urged For Anne Arundel

Baltimore, Jan. 30 (AP).—A tunnel under the Chesapeake Bay from the neighborhood of Sandy Point in Anne Arundel County to Kent Island has been suggested as an alternative to a bay bridge.

Nathan L. Smith, chairman of the State roads commission, said today such a proposal had been put before him, but that there had not yet been time to give it serious study.

Before a decision could be made, Smith said, it will be necessary to compare carefully the cost of building, operating, lighting and ventilating the tunnel, with estimates of the costs of a bridge and a high-speed ferry.

He explained that a fast ferry is a third possible means of establishing closer connection with the Eastern Shore.

$7,178 Demanded Of Harry K. Thaw

Suit Charges Sum Due on Judgment, Transfer.

Winchester, Va., Jan. 30 (Spl.). Seeking to recover $7,178.02 with interest since June 21, 1932, John S. Lopez, of New York City, has filed suit in Frederick Circuit Court here against Harry Kendall Thaw, owner of Kenilworth estate at Stephenson.

The papers filed by Lopez assert that the plaintiff secured a judgment against Thaw in the City Court of New York on June 21, 1932, in the sum $3,946.46 and declared that neither this amount or any part of it has been paid by the defendant or his agent, although frequent demands have been made for settlement.

The balance of the amount Lopez is seeking is $3,231.56 and is the result of a legal assignment the plaintiff says was made to him by Arthur B. Reeve, who, Lopez says, was owed this sum by Thaw before the assignment was made. The case has been placed on the calendar for February 4.

Plea Denied, Mais and Aid Die Saturday

Gov. Peery Rejects Move by Mother to Halt Killers' Execution.

By William T. Christian
(Special Correspondent of The Post).

Richmond, Jan. 30.—Walter Legenza and Robert Mais must die in the electric chair Saturday, Gov. Peery cut the last thread of hope to which they clung when he denied pleas of clemency and delay made by Mrs. Elizabeth Mais and M. Haley Shelton, their attorney, today.

Mrs. Mais entered the executive office at 11:30 a. m., and asked that her son's sentence be changed to life imprisonment on the ground that he had a previously clear record and that he had been led astray by older men. Shelton presented a plea for Legenza that he be allowed to recuperate so that he would walk to the chair. The gangster is suffering from a fractured leg and the attorney said that it would be "inhuman" to execute him in his condition.

After a conference which lasted more than half an hour, the Governor expressed his sympathy toward the widowed mother of the killer, but said he felt that he could not set aside the decision of the court.

Jurors Refuse Plea.

Eleventh hour efforts of Mr. Shelton to obtain recommendations of clemency from members of the jury which tried Mais last August apparently met with failure. Several of those who served said that they had been called on the telephone last night and asked for their signatures to such a petition, but none could be found who was willing to advocate the changing of the sentence which they returned more than five months ago.

One former member of the jury said that an effort to put Mrs. Mais on the wire had been made, but he thought it best not to talk to her, in view of his sentiments in the case.

Meanwhile, Arthur (Dutch) Misunas, much traveled gangster who has received two prison sentences in the last two days, may take still another trip before he enters the State penitentiary to begin his 35-year term.

Misunas was returned from Washington last night and awaits his prison commitment papers at Henrico Jail. In Hustings Court today it was said that the necessary documents would not be forwarded to the penitentiary until it was certain that Baltimore authorities did not want the man to testify in another trial there. Misunas aided the State in the conviction of Mais and Legenza. He also testified against two more of his former friends in a Washington trial recently.

Prepare for Execution.

Meanwhile, preparations for the electrocution of the first gangsters ever to be put to death in Virginia went forward at the penitentiary as the last-minute efforts failed to secure stays of execution from the Governor. In death row Mais and Legenza still hoped. They had not been informed their last hope had faded.

Superintendent Rice M. Youell has received so many requests from persons who wish to view the early morning executions that he chose two separate juries today. Twelve persons will view the first death and will file out to make room for another 12 to follow. The persons who will witness the killings were chosen from the more than 200 applications which Maj. Youell received, but their names were withheld.

Gov. Peery was in conference with Dr. Mann, the prison surgeon, and Rice M. Youell, superintendent of the penitentiary, when Mrs. Mais and the attorney came.

Social and Club Notes
Of Towns and Cities in Nearby States

By Elisabeth C. Taylor.

The Women's Club of Charles Town, W. Va., will hear a talk on the "Use of Art," by Miss Pattie Willis, who was engaged to paint murals for some of the local buildings last year under one of the Federal projects. The meeting at which Mrs. F. M. Phillips, president, will preside will be held at 3:30 p. m. Friday.

Many of the women's clubs have set aside some specific day of the month for welfare work and other charitable activities. The Martinsburg (W. Va.) Women's Club is divided into sections for the purpose of enabling the members to participate in the activities most interesting to them. One of these sections is the home department, which interests itself in welfare work. Part of the work done by the section is to sew on clothing for the needy. The meetings alternate between the two hospitals in town. Other clubs have made it their business to see that undernourished children in the public schools are fed hot meals at noon time or supplied with milk and crackers at the morning recess. The Martinsburg home department, under the leadership of Mrs. Ethel T. Feller, meets on alternate Wednesdays at 2 p. m.

As scheduled, the Potomac Playmakers will present "An American Dream" at 8:15 p. m. today. The Potomac Playmakers is a dramatic section of the Hagerstown (Md.) Women's Club. Miss Anna Katherine Roulette is in charge of the production.

Good morning! It is not smart to freeze. As a matter of fact wool socks, mufflers, gloves are required fashion details. Sweaters, zipper leather jackets, overcoats that are massive are also currently important. We don't know what started the system of reducing prices of such things when they are most needed, but they are reduced!

A Very What-Ho Romantic Comedy, With an Ace Cast, Makes Debut at Keith's

Picturization Of Stage Play Swanky Affair

Reprinted From Yesterdays Last Edition.

"ENCHANTED APRIL." RKO-Radio picturization of the novel by "Elizabeth" and dramatization by Kane Campbell, adapted to the screen by Samuel Hoffenstein and Ray Harris, starring Ann Harding, with Frank Morgan, Reginald Owen, Katherine Alexander, Jane Baxter, Ralph Forbes, Jessie Ralph, Charles Judels and Rafaela Ottiano. Directed by Harry Beaumont. Reviewed Tuesday afternoon.

By Nelson B. Bell.

In fashioning the romantic fiction upon which this engaging whimsy is based, "Elizabeth," the author, penetrated perhaps a little too deeply into the intricacies of the feminine mind and heart to be wholly intelligible to the mass of present-day seekers after transparent entertainment.

The mental processes and the points of view of her two leading characters are at times a bit abstruse for any but that largely mythical segment of the public known as the intelligentsia.

Two British matrons approaching the "grateful age" encounter each other for the first time on a dismal, rainy afternoon in the none too gay parlors of the Hampstead Housewives Club. One is the wife of a former research drudge in the British Museum, the other of a pompous mediocrity of the legal profession. Both crave the release from the drab humdrum of their lives promised by a newspaper ad that an Italian villa, dripping with sunshine and smothered in flowers, may be rented for the month of April at a price within the reach of their combined "nest eggs."

Inured to the restrictive urges of thrift, they "invite" two other British ladies to join their junket—at a modest price. These turn out to be the ancient Lady Fisher and the younger, but no less acidulous Lady Caroline Dester, who treat their "hostesses" with the utmost condescension.

Intent Is Veiled.

In the characters of this quartet of yearning women is expressed a feminine philosophy of life, love and the pursuit of happiness that is at least opaque, if not, at times, utterly impenetrable to the frivolous mind of pleasure-seeking youth. One often wonders what under the sun the mooning Lotty Wilkins and the completely self-effacing Rose Arbuthnot may be driving at!

Then it comes about that Frederick Arthbuthnot, the overstuffed barrister, decides to join his wife at San Salvatore. Mellersh Wilkins, ignorant of his estranged wife's presence there, determines to pursue Lady Caroline to the same place, and the owner of the villa, a young painter, drops by to see that his tenants are not walking on his lilies. From this point on, the action, if not the underlying obscurity of much of the ladies' vacuous raphsodizing, takes on added alacrity and interest.

Mr. Arthbuthnot discovers entirely new virtues in a wife he had not before appreciated; Mr. Wilkins, who has been transmogrified into a lionized author of best-sellers from the timid little research clerk, makes the startling discovery that his wife is a far more charming woman than those about whom he either has written or raved, and Mr. Briggs, the property holder, discerns uncommon desirability in Lady Caroline.

Is Literate and Sophisticated.

This is all done in a spirit and atmosphere of literate sophistication that is delightful if one is minded to pay strict attention and get himself into the rarified mood of the author. There are occasional lapses into episode of strictly earthy comedy that strike an immediate responsive chord in the risibilities of those who have been slightly perplexed by the intricacies of Lotty's fantastic gropings for a "higher life"—or something.

Whatever the involvements of "Elizabeth's" stylized romancing, there can be no argument as to the capability of the splendid cast assembled for their attempted elucidation.

Ann Harding, as Lotty Wilkins, may be just a shade more vapid than usual, but the fault is rather the role's than hers, and to her admirers her performance will stand as a further monument to her quiet charm and facility in expression. Frank Morgan, as the transformed clerk, Mellersh Wilkins, who blossoms into a tea-table hero overnight, is, as always, a flawless interpreter of character, with a fine flair for comedy and a sure command of the sterner demands of his part.

Support and Supplementaries.

Among the others, Reginald Owen and Jessie Ralph are infinitely best. Mr. Owen has no peer in the depiction of the exceedingly broad "A," monocled, silly awss type of overdone Englishman. It is that kind of role he has here and he plays it tremendously well, even making a Mack Sennett bath scene a great deal more laughable than it is indelicate. Jessie Ralph, as Lady Fisher, proves herself—as she has many times before—a comedienne of the first rank. Ralph Forbes, Jane Baxter, Charles Judels and Rafaela Ottiano, trustworthy actors all, complete a distinguished roster.

The auxiliary attractions are numerous. The Pathe News, Screen Snapshots, "Dumb-Bell Letters," and color cartoon comedy, "Rainbow Parade," are short subjects of standard merit.

In "The Band Age," Ted Fio Rito and his orchestra offer a novel musicalized comedy-drama that is an appropriate supplementary of a feature that is equally above the charge of being stereotyped or outworn.

This will be a busy evening for Prof. Phil Lampkin, the fork-handed rattan-swisher at Loew's Fox Theater. In addition to Prof. Lampkin's usual stint at the theater, he also will participate in the local theater's contributions to the President's Ball at the Shoreham tonight, as musical conductor for the portions of the bill the Fox is sending down and besides that he is pledged the services of himself and his orchestra to the services of the California State Society's ball being held at the Raleigh. The courtesy of this last appearance is being extended the California State Society by Loew's Washington theaters because Prof. Lompkin himself is a Californian—ranch owner and everything. But I still say it will be a busy evening.

The Rubaiyat of Rubinoff.

Max Gottfried, the leading professor or music in Grodno, Russia, said the boy had real musical talent. Mrs. Rubinoff, believing in her son much more rapturously than the professor, agreed with him.

The professor had first heard little David playing the balalaika—the triangular Russian counterpart of our mandolin—and was so impressed that he offered to teach the boy violin, gratis.

But the Rubinoff family, even collectively, were not able to afford the violin. The few rubles that came from the father's job as tobacco packer and the fewer the mother garnered from her laundry mangle were hardly enough to support the family of seven children.

Mrs. Rubinoff, however, did not permit the professor's offer to escape her mind and, being the mother that most mothers are, one fine day came home with the coveted instrument. One ruble, 75 kopikas—or something of the sort, amounting to approximately $1.75 in money—and some shrewd bargaining had done the trick.

When the young boy saw the violin and knew it was his, the same light came into his eyes that comes there now when he tucks the Stradivarius, bearing the Romanoff crest and a value of $100,000, under his chin to play one of his famous compositions.

Biography in Brief.

Dave Rubinoff was born in Grodno, Russia, 37 years ago—that is the popular age among this week's headliners, in case you remember Phil Baker's . . . After his lessons with Prof. Gottfried, he studied at the Royal Conservatory of Music in Warsaw . . . Emerged a child prodigy and toured as such . . . Came to America at 15 and, with his family, settled in Pittsburgh . . . Soon leader of Forbes High School Band . . . Could not speak a word of English, but talked in music and made band famous . . . Paid $1 for one rehearsal a week and sold papers on the side, or the side streets, or somewhere . . . In time started professional orchestra of his own . . . Then recitals in such cities as Cleveland, Philadelphia and the like . . . Next, Minneapolis, where he played with the symphony and at Carlin's Cafe . . . Married in Cleveland and then became affiliated with the Rubin & Finkelstein chain of theaters in the West as guest conductor and soloist . . . In 1926 went with Loew's Inc., opening all their new houses, remaining in each as guest conductor, from four weeks to ten months, as occasion demanded or warranted . . . During this professional activity he opened Loew's Palace Theater in this city . . . Diagonally across the street, by an odd coincidence, from the Warner Brothers Earle, where he is headlining the stage bill this week . . . Then to the New York Paramount for seven years, where he became the talk of Main Street in show business . . . Became fast friend of Rudy Vallee's . . . This friendship brought first chance on radio . . . First broadcast for Chase & Sanborn January 11, 1931 . . . Maurice Chevalier headlined hour at this time . . . Cantor came along on program a year and a half after Dave . . . Noted for his compositions and classical arrangements . . . Plays one of his own at the Earle this week, "Dance of the Russian Peasants" . . . Called "the mob artist," because of his ability—like John McCormack—to win the acclaim of the masses . . . So now you know.

It is remarkable how many screen personalities can be crowded into one issue of the "Screen Snapshots." The one currently at RKO-Keith's will afford you fleeting—or longer—glimpses of these: Eleanor Holm and Art Jarrett, Alice White, Cy Bartlett, Johnny Mack Brown, Pat O'Brien, Norman McLeod, Andy Devine, Nick Foran, Charles Starrett, Fay Wray, John Wayne, William Bakewell, Marlene Dietrich, Charlie Chaplin, Charles Farrell, Mary Pickford, Bebe Daniels, Ben Lyon, Ann Dvorak, Leslie Fenton, Maureen O'Sullivan, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Brisson, Louise Fazenda, Edward Everett Horton, Ann Sothern, Vincent Lopez, Nancy Carroll, Roger Pryor, Molly O'Day, Jack Durant, Douglass Montgomery, Marguerite Churchill, George O'Brien, Natalie Moorhead, Alan Crosland, May Robson, John Boles, Jeanette MacDonald and probably half that many more I don't remember.

Word to the Wise Noted.

This would be a good morning to listen to WJSV at 10:45 a. m. I won't be on it. This, of course, if due to Roy Atwell's recent visit—"Some Little Bug" has got me!

Compatriots Compare Composers

When His Excellency Ambassador Troyanovsky of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics entertained Rubinoff, radio's best-known violinist, headlining this week's stage bill at the Earle, in the studio of the Embassy, 1125 Sixteenth street, yesterday afternoon, they discussed modern Russian composers, the possible formation of a great Russian Symphony and a proposed tour of Russia by the fiddler made famous by four years on the networks without ever having missed a Sunday night in four years of broadcasting. The Ambassador, at right, above, was interested that Rubinoff's Stradivarius bears the crest of the Romanoffs and that he always carries an ancient Russian coin as a good-luck piece.

Virginian Is Made Kentucky Colonel

Lafoon Confers Rank on Lafayette Bean.

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 30 (Spl.).—Lafayette Bean, of this city, who once served in the upper branch of the Massachusetts General Assembly to earn the title of Senator, is also a Kentucky colonel.

Notification of his appointment as an aid de camp with the rank of colonel on the staff of Gov. Ruby Lafoon of Kentucky, arrived yesterday.

Col. Bean's letter said that whereas other men to get the rank of colonel had to fight and many times bleed for the honor, all that will be required of him is "to drink your liquor straight and love our women."

Judge R. K. McMorris, 62, Succumbs in Alabama

Wetumpka, Ala., Jan. 30 (AP).—Judge Rolling K. McMorris, 62, whose unusual career included the naval, military and legal professions, died at the home of his brother, J. S. McMorris, here early today. He had been ill only a few days, being stricken while on a visit from his home in St. Louis.

Judge McMorris, an Annapolis graduate in 1894, served throughout the Spanish-American War and resigned from the Navy in 1901. Returning to his home here, he moved to Birmingham in 1913. He served with the old First Alabama Cavalry Regiment throughout the World War. Later he was appointed judge of the Nineteenth Alabama Judicial Circuit and was elected to succeed himself in 1920.

'Respectable' Robber Links Jeweler to Plot

New York, Jan. 30 (AP).—A witness who described himself as a "good, respectable, experienced, competent robber" testified today that Charles W. Schumann, head of a midtown jewelry firm, arranged with him to burglarize the gem shop.

Lawrence Levy, the witness, previously had pleaded guilty to a conspiracy charge and received a suspended sentence. With an accomplice, Levy took jewelry worth $111,000 and sold it for $10,000. The Sun Insurance Office, Ltd., declined to pay the loss, contending it was an inside job.

Performance of "La Traviata," by the Cosmopolitan Opera Association, in Constitution Hall; Richard Lert, conductor. The cast:
Violetta.....Edis de Philippe
Alfredo Germont.....Ralph Gerard
Giorgio Germont.....Jean Ferdulli
Baron Douphol.....Lopes de Olivares
Flora.....Flora Doris
Gastone.....Ludovico Oliviero
Marchese d'Obigny.....Ernesto Neri
Annina.....Georgia Standing
Dr. Grenville.....Luigi delle Molle

No better argument can be advanced for the need of an adequate opera house in the National Capital than one presented by Max Rabinov's artistic forces on this occasion. Despite the difficulties of mise-en-scene in a hall without theatrical equipment, the production was remarkably effective under conditions which a less experienced stage manager than Dr. Ernest Lert might have considered hopeless. With drapes and screens and an extemporized lighting system he contrived settings which answered the material purposes and served as a basis for imagination. And in those settings the singing dramatic personae conducted themselves with an adaptability that assured a smooth performance.

An audience that came close to capacity size welcomed the visitors from New York with a heartiness which was an excellent augury for the future. From the evidence of applause one would judge that appreciation of the company's proficiency in trying circumstances was a matter of general agreement. Once the makeshift devices for theatrical illusion were overlooked, what met the eye was pleasing in details of costuming, in skillful stage management, and in all the paraphernalia of production, including a picturesque and lissome ballet.

Edis de Philippe was an ingratiating impersonator of the frail Violetta, with a voice admirably fitted to the role of a physically fragile heroine. Light in quality and clearly intoned, her soprano is flexible in floriture, accurate and delicate in lyrical phrasing, and emotionally colored. That she experienced some strain in the high notes of "Ah fors' e lui" and "Sempre libera," one is inclined to attribute to a temporary hoarseness, for the slight veiling of the tone disappeared in the succeeding acts.

Seldom does one see so young a prima donna completely in command of a role. The ease of her acting betrayed no self-consciousness, and it was evident that her cues were all memorized to the fraction of a rhythmic beat, for she was under no hypnotic necessity to watch the conductor. Indeed, she rarely glanced in his direction, addressing her singing to the person with whom she was supposed to be conversing, and at times she deliberately turned her back to the orchestral despot.

Personable and attractive in mien and movement, she won the sympathy of her auditors from the start and deepened it as she proceeded with the role. Her work in the second act was distinguished by finesse both in histrionism and vocalism, reaching its most poignant moments in the "Dite alla giovine." Unless all signs fail, this young artist is destined to go far on the operatic road.

Ralph Gerard, substituting for Armand Tokatyan, who apologized in overcoat and muffler for his retirement from the cast because of a feverish illness, acquitted himself in a manner worthy of compliment. In his first aria, "Libiam nei lieti calici," he disclosed a tenor voice of soft and pleasing timbre, which warmed to a glowing lyricism in the duet, "Un di felice." That he has dramatic fervor he proved in his reading of "Dei miei bollenti spiriti" in the second act.

Jean Fardulli made a good impression in the ungrateful part of the elder Germont, which allows but one effective aria, "Di Provenza il mar." He did so well in that piece of musical consolation that the audience demanded a repetition, and he compromised by singing the latter half again. All the minor roles were creditably filled, Lopes de Olivares, in particular, making a much more interesting Baron Douphol than one usually hears.

A word of approbation also must be spoken for the spirited and expert dancing of Albia Kavan, Georges Chaffee, Carola Ayorvide, Edith Donnan, Pearl Osgood, Grace Walsh and the assisting corps de ballet. Nor should one forget those members of the National Symphony Orchestra who responded so capably to Richard Lert's magisterial direction.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

The Exhibitors

Hollywood, Jan. 29.

THE CAREER of a motion picture begins only after it has completed its engagement on Broadway, receiving a panning or a praising from the critics. I like to follow a picture to the smaller towns and see what amuses them. Towns so small that the only cinema critic is the guy who pays to show the flicker. Therefore, I turn to the comments of the exhibitors in the Motion Picture Herald who tell what the customers told them. It is amazing and sometimes a little sad to learn their tastes.

Elisabeth Bergner created a sensation when she opened in a play in New York. Before the curtain rose on "Escape Me Never" the dramatic critics believed her to be a great actress. The only point to argue was: "Is she the greatest actress?" They are still at it. Yet the majority of these critics had seen Elisabeth Bergner only once before and then in a motion picture, "Catherine the Great."

* * * *

Yet this same Elisabeth Bergner in this same "Catherine the Great" was not well received after they left the big cities. The small towns didn't go for it and I quote from one of many. Exhibitor George F. Smith, of Lapeer, Mich., writes: "No excuse for this picture. Another foreign importation that makes me feel like a chump. I run one of these pieces of intellectuals about every six months and then swear not to do it again. Like buttermilk, it is fine for them what likes it." Miss Bergner didn't get a chance to get started big in the villages. They don't like foreign flickers and they seldom go for costume pictures.

* * * *

IT IS an exceptional costume picture that gets over with the fans of the small town. Exhibitor Earl J. McClurg, of Preston, Idaho, is another who will tell you about costume flickers in writing about the American-made version of "Catherine the Great." He tells: "The Scarlet Empress" is 103 minutes of grandeur wasted on a poor story with no interest. Horses beautiful, scenery excellent, but why did Paramount waste all that money on such a story? Let's get away from those costume bewhiskered extravaganzas . . ."

Yes, you'd be surprised at some of the pictures which do the business in the hick towns. Pictures that you didn't know had been made. Exhibitor B. A. McConnell is excited about Buck Jones in "The Fighting Ranger." You can shout the praises of genuine artists, but give Mr. McConnell and his troupe Buck Jones.

* * * *

"Leave it to Buck Jones to pull you out of a hole. This Western has everything demanded of a high-class action picture," writes this exhibitor. "One lady remarked as she came in: "Why do you have to run these old Western pictures?" When she came out she apologized for the remark and said she enjoyed it more than she could express."

Another: Exhibitor John H. Forrester, of Waldron, Ark., writes about "From Broadway to Cheyenne," with Rex Bell, whom you know as Clara Bow's husband. "One of the old Westerns I picked up for the rural Saturday crowds. Anything with a horse and a gun goes well with them."

* * * *

THE exhibitors in some instances are a good sample of their patrons. One exhibitor actually objected to the title "The Merry Widow," saying it was copied from an old piece of music and kept the customers away because they thought that song was in the picture.

Exhibitor A. E. Hancock, of Indiana, makes an error when commenting on "365 Nights in Hollywood." He writes: "Two nights was too long for this one. Jimmy Dunn miscast again and and this Mitchell and Durant are another pair of radio stars that when seen on the screen are very unfunny. In fact, they are worse than that . . . when will producers learn that it is easy to turn off what you don't like on the radio?"

Mitchell and Durant never did their acrobatic act over the radio, but they would be very much obliged to Mr. Hancock if he would tell them how to do it, for he claims to have tuned in on them.

"Down to Their Last Yacht" has yet to receive a favorable comment. Exhibitor Roy W. Adams, of Mason, Mich., says: "This is a 50-50 picture; half the audience went to sleep and the other half walked out . . ."

Writing about "The Pursuit of Happiness," Exhibitor McClurg pens these few words: "Another old-time, foolish costume picture. Did very poor business at the box office and certainly my people do not like bundling." Which explains why Preston, Idaho, is a small town with a population of only 3,235 people.

Nats Acquire Five Rookie Pitchers

Alleged to Be Timber for Majors, But First Names Unknown.

Rookie Batterymen to Spend Week at Biloxi Ahead of Harris.

By Shirley Povich.

AN advance guard of Nats, including five young pitchers apparently so unimportant in the reckoning tha tGriffith Stadium officials yesterday were unable to provide their full names, will set up the Washington Ball Club's Southern training camp at Biloxi on February 24 without benefit of the presence of Manager Bucky Harris.

Young men by the name of Cesnovar, Peticolas, Coppola, Etts and Muclahey, alleged to be big league timber at some distant future date, are the most recent acquisitions of the Washington club, it was announced. They are pitchers, at least they want to be, it was said.

Neither were Griffith Stadium people able to provide the rceords of the quintet of new recruits. Their home towns were given, however, as: Coppola, East Douglas, Mass.; Peticolas, Chicago; Cesnovar, Cleveland; Mucahey, Allston, Mass., and Etts, Margaretville, N. Y.

An Old Failing.

Thus, the local baseball firm perpetuates its strange reputation for neglecting the first names of its young talen, a custom that in past years resulted in a bit of free-hand christening by the baseball writers.

Because Clark Griffith was at a loss to provide the first name of a young outfielder bought from the Piedmont League two decades ago, Edgar Charles Rice went throgh baseball tabbed as Sam Rice, and because Griffith knew only the first initals of J. T. (John Thomas) Zachary, Mr. Zachary became known to players and fandom alike only as Jezebel Tecumseh Zachary.

Harris Reports March 1

Manager Bucky Harris will not report at Biloxi until March 1 when the main body of pitchers will put in an appearance. The rookies will be under the direction of Trainer Mike Martin during the first week in camp. The plan to defer Harris' arrival at Biloxi was born in the mind of Owner Griffith, who hopes to prevent his rookies from bearing down too severely in early training, a failing rookies have when under observation by the managerial eye.

Besides the five young rookies who are of such recent acquisition they were not included on the annual club roster, released yesterday by Assistant Secretary Billy Smith, eight other batterymen will report on February 24.

These are Pitchers Bobby Burke, Reese Digges, Sid Cohen, Orville Armburst, Dick Lanahan, Archie Scrivener, and Catchers Sammy Holbrook and Jack Redmond. Burke's inclusion with the second flight of rookies is of no significance, Smith hastened to say. It is of his own asking.

The little booklet containing the club roster, in the traditional red, white and blue color scheme, again is the handiwork of Assistant Secretary Smith, and besides listing the records, physical measurements and averages of the players during 1934, includes such enlightening items as the full name of Buddy Myer, which is revealed as Charles S. Myer, jr., which, I believe, is the first time it has appeared in print as such.

Nazis' Winter Olympics Site Lifted Out of Fairy Book Tale

By Paul Gallico

GARMISCH-PARTENKIRCHEN, Bavaria (By Mail).—American winter sport athletes and war correspondents who come to this wonderful place a year from today, particularly for the opening of the 1936 Olympic games, will find themselves in a little Bavarian Alpine village right out of a fairy story book.

Every little snow-covered street down which you walk, or ride in a horse-drawn sleigh, ajingle with bells, is like a setting out of Hansel and Gretel, or a story of dwarfs and gnomes and kobolds and fine-looking patriarchial old foresters in green coats and long beards. The gaily-painted houses all seem to be made of gingerbread and candy, and vanilla and strawberry frosting, all topped off with a foot or two of real icing on the roof. The pine trees are loaded with snow until their branches bend to the ground. Icicles hang from the eaves and balconies. The window panes of the little sausage shops will be half frosted. It is perpetually Christmas here.

Houses Gaily Frescoed.

Our boys will never have seen anything quite so gay or picturesque. All of the houses are chalet style in bright colors, and all with balconies. The outsides of these houses, the walls and their fronts, are all gaily frescoed in the old style with bright pictures of Biblical scenes and, sometimes, adventure scenes.

They all have peaked roofs, and beams and woodwork under the peak, or scroll work, or painted decorations. Most of them have the trade or profession of their owners painted in gothic letters on the outside, such as "Schneidermeister," or "Schumeister," standing for master tailor, or master shoemaker. Here the apprentice system of the old medieval guilds is still in full force. The little villages look and live much as they have for the last many hundreds of years.

Await Visitors' Wishes.

When I asked the Herr Direktor Werneck what plans had been made to receive, quarter and take care of the teams, and particularly the American contingent, he told me that first of all he would await the wishes of the various teams, and then would govern himself according to those wishes. He told me that when the American committee acquaints him with the number of men who will be in the party, and whether they wish to be in the town or out of it, to have a local cook, or their own cook, he will take care of them in just that manner.

Garmisch-Partenkirchen is in the throes, practically, of war-time billeting, and Werneck is the chief billeting officer. He plans to take over entire houses for various nations, and thus keep them all living together under one roof, with their own cooks, their own kind of food, and one German liaison officer, not military, but civilian, a chap who speaks the language of the team to which he is assigned and whose sole duty will be to see that his team gets everything it wishes in the line of food, drink, information and courtesies.

Hosts Are Efficient.

The Germans are going about this business as you might expect they might—thoroughly and efficiently. I have a copy of their billeting blank, or rather an inventory blank, on which, as they go from house to house in the village, they list not only every room and bed, but also every chair, table, couch and mirror, the type of heating, bathing and toilet facilities, lighting, balconies and even the view therefrom. Absolutely nothing is overlooked or left to chance. According to its accommodations, each house or room is then listed as very good, good, sufficient, or won't do.

There will be no profiteering or price boosting. The committee, according to the quality of the quarters, will affix the price to be charged right to the door. Every bed or room in the village will have the official price fixed by the Olympic committee, one that is fair to both parties, the landlord and the guest.

Thus, said Director Werneck, the average per person, for bed and three full meals a day, will be somewhere around eight marks, which at the present rate of exchange, is around $3.20 a day for room and board. And if the Americans will think to buy registered marks before coming over here that will make the rate even cheaper.

V. M. I. Defeats Va. Tech by 40 to 25

Cadets Score First League Victory of Season Over Gobblers.

LEXINGTON, Va., Jan. 30 (AP).—Virginia Military Institute snapped out of a four-game losing streak here tonight to defeat Virginia Tech, 40 to 25. It was the first Southern Conference basket ball victory for the Cadets this season.

Capt. Bill Downey of the Cadets shifted from guard to forward and paired with Charlie Hancock to set the pace for their teammates. Each scored 12 points.

Tech was held to 2 field goals, both by Louis Fittro, in the first half. With 7 points, he was the Gobblers' high-score man.

Tech took the lead in the first few minutes of play, but the close floor work and accurate shooting of Hancock, Merola and Watkins gave V. M. I. a half-time lead of 20 to 12.

City Postmaster Aids Game Birds

Plans Distribution of Food Supplied by Public.

The kindness and foresight of City Postmaster William M. Mooney may mean the saving of thousands of game birds and animals in this section.

With cold and snow killing almost as many wild game as do hunters, Postmaster Mooney has consented to distribute food to the little birds and animals, provided the public supplies the packages.

Postmaster Mooney will accept bags or sacks of cracked corn, bread crumb and wheat to feed the starving animals and birds. His rural mail carriers, numbering six, will distribute them where they are most needed.

Newport News Crushes Fredericksburg Five

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 30 (Spl.).—Newport News High School defeated Fredericksburg High, 37 to 18, here tonight. Throughout the first half Coach Julius Conn, of Newport News, substituted frequently, but at half-time Newport News led, 16 to 8, mainly through the accurate shooting and passing of Joe Mitchell.

Stepping out in the fourth period Newport News' guard, Baxter, found the basket time after time. He was high scorer of the evening with 12 points. Bill Payne, with 9 points, and Capt. Stewart Hoskins shined for the light and inexperienced Fredericksburg quintet.

Golfers Paced By Amateur On Coast

Holbrook Tops Initial Play in $6,500 Open Event.

GLENDALE, Calif., Jan. 30 (AP).—While golfers of fame were struggling along with high scores, Jack Holbrook, a young Glendale amateur, came in today with a 68, two strokes under par, to lead the field at the end of the first round qualifying play of the Oakmont $6,500 open championship.

Five Tied With Par 70's.

Five others were deadlocked at 70 to tie fifth place. These, who equaled par, were Bunny Torpey, Kansas City; Verne Torfin, Tacoma, Wash.; Ben Loving, Petersburg, Va.; Harry Cooper, Chicago, and John Perelli, Lake Tahoe, Calif.

Three strokes back of the leaders with cards of 71 were Vic Ghezzi, Deal, N. J., Los Angeles open champion; Tony Butler, Harlingen, Texas, and Les Madison, Hollywood.

Harold McSpaden, of Kansas City, Kans., the leading money winner of the California tours to date, was forced to shoot a 33 on the back nine to tie for thirteenth place with six others at 72. Gene Sarazen of New York, former open champion, required 73 strokes today to get around the 6,720-yard layout. John Revolta, of Milwaukee, runner-up for the Los Angeles open title, shot a 75.

Wood Trails With 77.

Even farther back were Craig Wood, Deal, N. J., leading money winner two years ago, with a 77; Jimmy Thomson, of Long Beach, Calif., Australian open titleholder, with a 78, and Wiffy Cox, of Brooklyn, Agua Caliente champion, who shot a 79.

The remaining half of the field will play its initial round tomorrow. The final round of the 72-hole medal play will come Sunday, with the winner collecting $800 prize money.

The entire visiting squad saw service as Coach Lynn Woodworth juggled the line-up in an effort to find greater scoring power. Elwood Ey, of Roosevelt, took the scoring honors with 9 points, while Frank Bailey and Francis Beamer, his teammates, tallied 8 each. Roosevelt had a 19-14 lead at half-time but quickly widened it in the third period.

Campbell Grimly Aware of Risks In Racing Rendezvous With Death

Briton, Here, Points Out Precautions Taken for Record Attempt.

By Bill McCormick.

"REAHLLY now, I positively would not say I'd do 300 miles an are with the Bliuebuhd this yeah," emphasized Sir Malcolm Campbell, addressing the press, to whom he was devoting a few moments of the borrowed time on which he has been living since he started urging mechanical juggernauts to the breaking point in search of new speed records. "I most positively would not say I'd do 300 miles an are."

"But," he added speculatively, continuing in an English brogue as thick as the carpets on Mr. Frank Massey's Florida Special which was bearing him from New York to Daytona Beach last night, "the difference between my lawst yeah's recohd of two seventy, point one oh eight and 300 miles an are is only one, point two three seconds per mile, so it might be done. It all depends on conditions."

By conditions, it was explained, was meant the freedom of the course from bumps and wind.

Life in Balance.

"At high speeds," elucidated he who travels fast, nervously flicking a cigarette ash to the rapidly expanding pile on the Pullman carpet, "a very slight bump sends one slithering off line, and one loses a second or two and one's chahnces of breaking a recohd. A very slight gust of wind can do the same thing." Sir Molcolm failed to add that either a slight bump or gust of wind might cause one to crack up and lose one's life. Apparently such things aren't thought about, at least not spoken about.

Because the moon will be full—a full moon affects the tide and the tide plays an important part in making the Daytona Beach course suitable for a speed run—Campbell probably will attempt to lower his last year's record on February 18 this year.

A slight figure, weighing not more than 150 pounds, Campbell's appearance belies his fifty-odd years. Or perhaps it isn't his appearance that belies his years, perhaps it's his feline energy and restlessness. His movements are catlike and swift. Like Dempsey, Jolson, and others whose glandular activities give them the same make-up, he apparently never rests, never is at ease.

Six Mechanics to Follow.

Campbell's search for greater speed is not a one-man affair. Some 500 others will play an important part in the speed runs. Six of them, his hand-picked and trained mechanics, are following him to Florida on a later train, accompanying the Bluebird, the 7-ton vehicle in which he will take his record-seeking jaunt. Everything but the 2,500 horsepower Rolls Royce motor in the Bluebird is new this year. Wind resistance brakes—fins which automatically raise when the brake pedal is pushed, to create air resistance—have been added. The body has been widened and in the rear there are four wheels instead of two—an arrangement very much like that used to give large trucks greater traction. The car never has been run.

"Had to bring the damned thing 5,000 miles to find a spot to work it in," grins Sir Malcolm. "Theah's no place in England wheah we can let it loose."

Others in the organization who will play an important part in the Campbell speed trials already are on the site, paving the way. One of the most important things in a speed trial is keeping spectators off the course. Should an eager or foolhardy spectator slip through the line of guards stretched along the 12-mile speedway, Sir Malcolm might be forced to swerve the juggernaut, lose control and crash into the sea—or lines of tightly packed humanity.

"Could you avoid running over

Bethesda-Chevy Chase Routs Landon Quintet

Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School, Montgomery County champions, rang up its twelfth win in 14 starts yesterday when it toyed with the Landon five, turning in a 27-to-15 victory on the Leland Court.

The winners started fast and had a 21-to-8 lead at the half with Landon, with Ray Brown, All-County forward from Bethesda last year and his brother in starring roles outplayed the hosts, 7 to 6, in the last half. Eddie Johnson found the hoop for five field goals to lead the scorers, Harris scored seven for second honors. Randall and L. Brown led the visitors.

Colonials Lose To D.-E. Five, 48 to 44

Long-Range Firing Wins Battle After G. W. Leads, 17 to 4.

A HARD-WORKING Davis-Elkins quintet that found itself on the small end of a 17-4 score in the first seven minutes of play, unwrapped a long-range scoring attack that knocked George Washington off balance into an inglorious defeat last night in the H street ice-box. The final score was 48-44—a real pitchers' battle.

George Washington started off in high gear and finished in reverse. Everything Capt. Jim Howell and his mates threw at the backboard early in the first period went through the hoop, while the visitors, as the score indicates, stood around and tried to look busy.

But when Davis-Elkins finally succeeded in introducing itself to the Colonials it made up for the lost time and G. W.'s tremendous lead vanished like a two-spot in a crap game. The West Virginians were only a point behind at the half, 28-29.

Vie on Even Terms.

Gutowski and Gainor took up where Jamison, who led the first period counter-attack, left off as the second and final half got under way and it was a battle for blood. No less than four times the boys found themselves battling on even terms while the fans almost shouted themselves hoarse.

Then Kendall potted a long shot, giving Davis-Elkins a 42-40 lead with three and a half minutes to the downtown school. George Washington was unable to cope with its opponent's fast-breaking attack, put play, and it sounded curfew for into operation from a five-man defensive formation.

With three men taking the ball down court and a single G. W. guard to stave them off—which resulted in the loss of George Washington's earlier lead, Davis-Elkins pulled ahead to a 47-41 advantage.

Howell Taps Scorers.

A foul and field goal by Tuffy Leemans pulled G. W. up to 44, but Kendall converted another foul for the eventual winners and they froze the ball in the last 30 seconds of play to clinch the victory.

Howell's 14 points enabled him to lead both teams in scoring, while Jamison, with 12, Gutowski and Gainor, with 11 each, were high for Davis-Elkins.

Rally by Army Tops Hoyas, 29 to 22

Last-Half Attack Proves Decisive as Dawalt Paces Scorers.

WEST POINT, Jan. 30 (Spl.).—A well-planned and perfectly executed counter-attack in the final half enabled Army to come from behind and gain a 29-22 victory over Georgetown in their annual game today. It was a close, roughly played game from start to finish.

Georgetown assumed the offensive at the outset and Don Gibeau gave the visitors a 2-0 lead on the initial tip-off. But the Cadets clung doggedly to Georgetown's heels and, with Ken Dawalt leading the way, managed to keep in the thick of the battle.

Dawalt led the scoring with six field goals, five of them made before the Hoyas bottled him up in the first half, which ended with Georgetown leading, 15-14.

Army's attack functioned more smoothly in the final stanza, while Georgetown failed to regain its stride. The Cadets took a 17-16 lead soon after the period opened and were never headed. Ed Hargaden, Georgetown captain, displayed his usual clever floor game and topped his team in scoring with six points.

Boy, Garden's Millionth Customer, Is Feted

Pucknopp was plucked out of the upper balcony line at last Sunday's hockey game after he had purchased a 40-cent ticket.

To his surprise, he was escorted to Kilpatrick's box, where he watched the Rangers whip the Americans. He also will be the guest of the Garden at Friday night's fight between Braddock and Lasky.

42 Jewish Athletes of 1932 To Shun Olympics in Berlin

BOSTON, Jan. 30 (U.P.).—Forty-two Jewish athletes who competed in the 1932 Olympic games at Los Angeles have decided against competing in the 1936 Olympics at Berlin because of Germany's anti-Semitic policies, according to Dave White, executive director of the United States Maccabi Association.

White, a former Harvard athlete, came from New York to Boston to announce details of the second Maccabiah, or Jewish Olympics, to be held at Tel-Aviv, Palestine, in April, and at the same time disclosed the state of mind of Jewish athletes regarding the world Olympics.

He said he has assurances of 42 former Olympic contenders, living in many countries, that they will not compete at Berlin. The Maccabi Association will not ask American-Jewish athletes to remain out of Germany, he said, but is hopeful they will stay out voluntarily.

White said a team of 30 competitors from the United States will sail from New York March 16 for the Jewish Olympics, to be held in Palestine from April 2 to April 9. Trials will be held in New York next month. Harry Hoffman and Milton Sandler, track stars; Millicent Hirsch and Bonnie Miller, tennis players; Lillian Copeland, Olympic women's discus champion; Janice Lifson, swimmer, and Ed Sabol, schoolboy dash star, are among those expected to compete. White invited Milton Green, of Harvard, who has equalled the world indoor high hurdles record, but studies may keep him home.

Old Line Lead Is Overcome By Middies

3,500 See Service Five Pull Away in Last Six Minutes.

By Lewis F. Atchison.
(Post Staff Writer.)

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 30.—Pulling away from its rival in the last six minutes of play with a Glenn Cunningham sprint, Navy chalked up a 43-36 victory over Maryland today on the armory court. A throng of 3,500 fans saw the Terrapins wage a game but futile battle against the sharp-shooting service team.

Navy expected to meet a slow-moving Terrapin and caught a snapping turtle instead, and what was supposed to be a light breeze for the Middies developed into a fair-sized nor'easter. But with Admiral "Buzz" Borries and "Dusty" Dornin on the bridge the Webfeet rode out the storm and reached port with their precious cargo.

It was a corking good game with enough action to raise the hair on a bald gentleman's head. Borries saw the first part of the fray from a reserved seat on the bench. Coach Wilson wanted to save him because of the Buzzer's bad leg. But when Bill Andorka and Al Waters, who led Maryland's scoring with 12 points, staked the Terps to a 6-2 lead, Borries was drafted into action.

Middies Take Lead.

Maryland clung tenaciously to its lead during the first 12 minutes of play until Dornin came through with a snowbird that gave the Middies a 10-9 advantage, which they held until the end. The score at half-time was 21-14.

Field goals by Keller and Waters made it 21-18 immediately after the start of the second period, but Borries and Fellows offset this with a couple of double-deckers for the Navy. Waters dropped a snowbird on a pass from Bernie Buscher, but Dornin's field goal and a foul shot by Borries made it 28-20 for the Tars.

Then Andorka, Buscher and Waters sank consecutive pot shots that shook Navy's morale so much the Middies called for time to rebuild their defense. The score stood Navy, 29; Maryland, 28. They struggled through the next three minutes without a score until the Terps called for time, and it cost them a free shot, which Borries converted.

Margin Is Slashed.

The Buzzer's foul prevented Maryland from tying the score, for 30 seconds later Waters took a pass from Willis and shoved the ball through to make it 31-28, and Buscher's pot shot pared Navy's lead to a single point.

But here Navy's superiority began to assert itself and before Maryland could get its attack moving again, the Webfeet ran their score to 39 points. Only a minute of play remained, with Navy leading, 43-32, when Buscher and Andorka sank field goals to inaugurate a futile rally that was cut short by the final bell.

15,000 See Sensational Finish

By Walter Haight.
(Post Staff Writer).

HIALEAH PARK, Miami, Fla., Jan. 30.—Larranaga, which earns oats enough for half of the Anall Stables' horses, added another purse to his long string today at this beautiful race track. The veteran gelding, winner of the Cuban Grand National two seasons ago, had to make full use of every ounce of his energy, however, to offset a sizzling stretch run by General Parth. This pair raced to the wire as a team but Larranaga stuck his ancient head in front at the all-important moment. Third in the field of eight was Sunador, the public choice.

It was July in February at the track as a bright sun chased away memories of the recent cold wave and the linen suits came out of temporary retirement. The usual 15,000 vacationists and regulars witnessed the program.

Sunador Assumes Lead.

Sunador broke out of the mile chute as if he was going to make a runaway of the race. Bobby Jones breezed him out into a daylight lead before the back stretch was reached. Larranaga was fourth on the outside under a snug hold by Eddie Arcaro as Changeling and Sun Monk followed the pace. General Parth was last.

The grueling pace began to tell on Sunador approaching the stretch turn. Changeling also gave up the ghost as Larranaga gained steadily. The gelding soon went to the front and appeared ready to win easily. However, General Parth developed express-train speed at the sixteenth pole and fairly shot at the leader, but Larranaga lasted to the wire.

Larranaga was well-played at a $6.30 mutuel. Arcaro made it a riding double.

Favorite Takes Opener.

The favorite players were off to a flying start when Our David took the first race at a $4.40 mutuel in a driving finish with Air Line and De Valera. Jake Lowenstein saddled the winner and Arcaro rode a beautiful race. The event was marked by a near tragedy when Apprentice Jockey Dupre fell from Sun Cloister at the far turn. Despite the fact that he was moving up in the field, he escaped with only a bruised hip and a general shaking up.

The three heaviest played horses completed the money bracket in the second race with Protagonist the winner at a $7 pay off. Mount Lookout and My Muggins chased the B. B. Stable's colorbearer across the line. They ran in that order virtually all the way with Jockey C. W. Smith forced to ride out on Protagonist.

M. Villena, the Chilean jockey, demonstrated his riding wares impressively in the third race, bringing Venetian along with a rush in the stretch to defeat Corrymeela, Captain Joy and nine others, including Dove of Peace, the favorite. Several in the field took a shot at pace setting, but the race was over when Villena made his move.

Mettle, which paid more than $100 to place last out, fairly flew through the stretch to win the fourth race. Master Lad and Towson were second and third after drawing the bulk of wagering. Fizzaz and Bobby Buxton, early leaders, faded when the real test came.

Mantagna, the favorite, proved much the best in the sixth race, coming around the field to win with the greatest of ease. Bloodroot and Thruster were closest to the $4.00 shot.

A chorus of booes marked the finish of the seventh race, in which only the judges could separate Matar and Mad Career. Standout was third.

At the Post . . .

Hialeah Park, Miami, Fla., Jan. 30.

Dear Al:

If you are having trouble locating a winner perhaps you can sympathize with Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt and Mrs. Payne Whitney. They met in the clubhouse the other day and young Vanderbilt, a popular young man who sits in a box in front of the clubhouse, asked the Greentree Stable owner what she thought of her Squawker in the first race. Mrs. Whitney said she did not believe the horse could win. So they called an attendant and sent down enough for a trip to Europe on another entry. Then they returned to their respective seats to see Squawker win and pay $31.10.

The stewards moved against inconsistent racing today when they announced that J. M. Jones, owner and trainer, has been suspended pending investigation of the racing of St. Stephens and Chartres. Jockey A. Snider, who rode St. Stephens last out, was set down for the remainder of the meeting for questionable riding. Clocker Mike and Trainer Joe are recovering their age after drinking out of the Fountain of Youth last Sunday. They were about 21 years old this morning.

BILL.

First race—Grog comes off a nice effort to meet a field of maidens and I'm expecting big things of him. Has speed enough to escape interference from that rail post position. Square Rigger is the one to beat. Broadway Bill, with one race under his belt, may surprise.

Second race—Toano gets in with a feather impost of 98 pounds and is backed by some remarkable workouts. Georgie Watson will do the riding and I see no reason for mistakes. Luculent and General A. to take care of the others.

Third race—Broad Meadows has shown flashes of his old form and finds a race here that seems to be made to order for him. Picks up only steadying weight and will have Arcaro in the saddle. Screen and Victorium figure close up and will be ready if the top one falters.

Fourth race—Lillian Uhl came through with a bang-up winning effort here the other day and she should make it two in a row in this company. Dark Lady and Vanished are a pair of fit ones and should complete the money bracket.

Fifth race—Diverting lost a close one last out and needs only to run back to that race to score here. Insomnia has worked well and may be the one to upset the talent. Paradisical for the show.

Sixth race—The figures bring Transport out on top of this group. All we need is a good rider. St. Moritz, with Jockey Abel up, could be dangerous. Cooney is an upset possibility.

Seventh race—Octoraro showed his turf form last out and ran away with the race. Opposition is about the same. Big Red is the one to beat. Peedeeque is still a sleeper and will win soon at a big price.

Best bet—Diverting.

VENETIAN was much the best. He broke good, but dropped back again, began to move up turning out of back stretch, came very wide entering stretch, took lead at furlong pole, and won galloping. CORRYMEELA, well up from the start, had no mishap. CAPTAIN JOY ran into lead in stretch, but faded away at finish. WATERSET ran a good race and is worth noting. DOVE OF PEACE quit badly.

FOURTH RACE—One mile (out of chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start poor. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:45. Off at 3:48. Winner, H. Dongan's ch. f. METTLE, well ridden, was allowed to rate along to the turn out of the back stretch, moved up very fast, took lead in stretch, drew away and won easily. TOWSON, on the outside, finished gamely. MASTER LAD made his move three furlongs from home, but could not make up any ground, and beat a very tired horse for the show. BOBBY BUXTON had plenty of early speed, but stopped badly in stretch. FIZZAZ ran well for five furlongs, then stopped.

LARRANAGA, well handled, was rated along back of the fast early pace to the final quarter-mile, then shot into lead, but had to be ridden hard to stall off the determined bid of GENERAL PARTH. The latter, badly outrun for the first half-mile, came to the outside in stretch, and finished with a rush. He would have won in a few more strides. SUNADOR opened up a slight lead early in the final furlong. CHANGELING, well up all the way, ran a good race. LATE DATE ran a fair race. NEW DEAL tired under the weight. SLAPDASH made a poor effort. SUN MONK had speed for seven furlongs.

MATAR broke very fast, but dropped back going around first turn, then moved up and into lead and just lasted to win. MAD CAREER came with a rush on the outside, but failed to get up. STANDOUT was probably best, but received a very poor ride. JUST AMERICAN had no mishap. OVALETTE failed to show anything worthwhile. FLAG WAVE showed a flash of early speed.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:45. Off at 5:47½. Winner, St. Louis Stable's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—LIMBUS, $9.10, $4.50, $2.80; FOXLAND HALL, $4.50, $3.00; PASS, $2.90.

LIMBUS moved up gamely in final three furlongs, caught FOXLAND HALL at the furlong pole, and drew away easily. FOXLAND HALL was used up racing MAYVITE into defeat, and tired suddenly. PASS was hard ridden all the way. FLYING DERE finished very fast. MAYVITE had speed for seven furlongs.

Cunningham's Training Routine Described

Logan Tells of Workouts of Star Preparing for a Specific Event.

(The eighth of a series of exclusive articles on the training and conditioning of athletes by the man who trained Jim Bausch and Glenn Cunningham when they won the Sullivan Award and who now trains the Boston Red Sox baseball club and the George Washington football and basket ball teams.)

By Roland Logan.

IN previous articles I have explained methods of building up the body in order to prepare it for athletic competition, but today I will relate more or less chronologically exactly how an athlete trains for a specific event. The athlete is none other than Glenn Cunningham, holder of the world's one-mile record—4 minutes, 6 7-10 seconds—who will race against his arch rival, Bill Bonthron, formerly of Princeton, and others in the famed Wanamaker mile of the Millrose games in Madison Square Garden Saturday night.

First I am going to say something of Cunningham's immediate background concerning this race. He and his wife are visiting with me this week and I have been helping him train at the George Washington University gymnasium and the Y. M. C. A.

Needs Rest and Sleep.

Coming from Boston where he won a mile race last Saturday night, 24 hours after winning a ¾ mile affair in Buffalo, 500 miles distant, Cunningham was more in need of rest and sleep than anything else when he reached Washington on Monday. He since has been training, but as yet hasn't gotten into tip-top shape. Long train rides, cold weather, etc., have interfered with his plans for outdoor running, which he considers necessary to attain his best condition.

In other respects, however, Cunningham's training has followed his usual routine. He has been able to observe his dietary rules, for one thing. His diet is moderate, regular and simple. He eats more of vegetables than meat and drinks plenty of milk. Steak is his favorite meat. He drinks no coffee and takes tea only before a race. He does not smoke and bars alcoholic beverages.

Warms Up With Basket Ball.

Monday afternoon Glenn resumed training in the G. W. U. gymnasium. First he warmed up by shooting baskets on the court, closely followed by ten minutes of rope skipping, alternately paced slow and fast. Thus, loosening his muscles, he ran around the gym, eight laps slowly and eight more at about three-quarters speed, and finally went through about three minutes of calisthenics, the same exercises as explained in one of my previous articles. This was topped off by a massage of the entire body—something he had been forced to forego due to traveling—and a brisk shower. That night he attended the G. W. U. football banquet.

On Tuesday, Cunningham underwent a more strenuous program. In the morning he took a walk, striding along easily and methodically, his arms and legs working in pendulum fashion. In the afternoon he went to the Y. M. C. A. to secure the benefits of running on the indoor track.

His first exercise consisted of rope skipping, beneficial to arm and leg coordination, and then he jogged around the track for a half mile. Next he indulged in some calisthenics—bends, stretches, etc.—and finally returned to the track to run a half mile at three-quarter speed. Never does Cunningham run at full speed for the entire distance of a practice. Again he got a massage, which included the legs, arms and chest, followed by a shower, hot and cold. At night he spoke at the Georgetown Boys' Club banquet and later was the guest, with his wife, of the Hon. Harry Woodring, Assistant Secretary of War, at the Kansas Day banquet and dance.

Losing "Kinks" in Legs.

Yesterday's workout was comparatively light, consisting principally of a 2-mile walk at brisk pace. During this walk he breathed deeply, and he felt much refreshed after getting lots of good oxygen into his lungs. He said that he was losing the "kinks" in his legs at the conclusion of the walk, which he topped off with a light, superficial massage. Last night he attended the G. W.-Davis-Elkins basket ball game.

Today Glenn will attempt a harder program, beginning with a walk this morning. Early this afternoon he will take another walk before going to the "Y" where he will go through some calisthenics including high kicks and deep bends which should benefit the muscles of the pelvic region. He will then do his first sprinting of the week. This will be followed by a quarter-mile jog, a rubdown, and a shower.

Tomorrow the record-holder will entrain for New York but not before he has taken walks before breakfast and after lunch.

In New York Saturday, Glenn has planned walks before each meal, the last of which will precede the big race by about three hours. For this meal he will order a small steak, toast, tea and baked potato. He will then go to bed for one hour's rest.

At the Garden previous to the race he will jog a half-mile on the 11-lap wooden track, do some calisthenics and a series of short sprints, take a light rubdown, especially on the legs, and return to the track ten minutes before the starting gun.

Most Brilliant Field in D. C. Swim Annals in Meet Tomorrow

Stars of East And Midwest Will Vie

By John R. Vosburgh.

THE fastest field of men and women swimmers ever assembled in Washington will flood the Shoreham's handsome Venetian pool with a brilliant array of champions tomorrow night when the District A. A. U. inaugurates its local indoor season with an open meet, drawing entrants from throughout the East and parts of the Midwest.

From Milwaukee to Boston and from Baltimore to Buffalo comes the big entry list of 64 competitors. From 13 out-of-town swimming clubs and 5 Washington organizations many of the foremost acquatic figures of their respective sections of the country are coming to match strokes and talent in the seven races and the diving event on the program. The complete entry list was announced last night by A. Earle Weeks, secretary of the A. A. U. swimming committee.

National Title at Stake.

Standing out as the feature event of the evening is the men's national 220-yard breast-stroke championship in which Dyer Ghormley, of George Washington University, is seen as the sole Washington hope to come through against some of the best back-strokers in the business.

Ghormley, District champion, must fight off two of the choice favorites to win, Ezar Cukor and Kurt Neunzig," of the Dragon Club A. C. of Brooklyn, not to speak of several other highly-rated entrants. Cukor is Eastern Interscholastic champion, and Neunzig placed fourth in the National A. A. U. championships last summer.

Among the other favorites are Louis Mahern, of the Hoosier A. C. of Indianapolis, champion of Indiana and Kentucky; Mike Paskouskas, of Baltimore, South Atlantic champion; Mortimer Silverman, Boston University; Urro Saari, of Buffalo, Niagara champion, and Martin Mintz, of the Broadwood A. C. of Philadelphia.

Women's Field Brilliant.

The women's entry list is studded with enough speedsters to make a record-breaking evening virtually assured. In the 50-yard free-style, Ann Bono, District champion, and holder of the District record, stands only an even choice in a starry field including Jean Kolinski, Wisconsin's all-around champion; Helen Alain, of Baltimore, South Atlantic champion; Dorothy Forbes, of the Camden A. C., New Jersey champion, and Marie Glazier, of the Philadelphia Penn A. C., Middle Atlantic champion.

Rita Augusterfer, District and national junior 220-yard free-style champion, faces an equally tough assignment in the furlong against such flashes as her rival, Florence Peck, of Philadelphia, Middle Atlantic champion, and Miss Forbes, Miss Kolinski, Miss Alain and also Bernice Lapp, of the Newark (N. J.) Women's A. C.

One of the most colorful events of the evening promises to endanger the world's 150-yard individual medley for women with Miss Kolinski, Central A. A. U. champion, the favorite over a field including Miss Glazier, Margaret Russell, of Baltimore, South Atlantic champion; Leonora Taube, District indoor champion; Betty O'Toole, District indoor titleholder, and Wanda Saari, of Buffalo, Western New York champion.

Due to the large number of entrants, the races will be run on a time basis for each heat, with no finals, except in the national breast-stroke test.

Central Wins Swim Meet By 41-35

Western Impressive, But Bows in Inter-High Aquatic Contest.

CENTRAL HIGH'S powerful swimming team defeated Western, 41 to 35, yesterday at the Y. M. C. A. pool to win the first interhigh acquatic meet held between local schools in a number of years.

One of the strongest scholastic teams in the South Atlantic section, Central found itself pressed closely to win and was forced to take first places in two of the last three events on the program to come out ahead.

The smooth stroking of Bob Jordan, Central's ace free-styler, proved the margin of victory. Displaying unexpected strength in almost every event, Western was, nevertheless, unable to match the distance-eating speed of the Central young star who won the 100-yard free style in easy fashion from Capt. Ham Dorman, of Western, and then took the baton in the final lap of the medley relay with the teams racing on even terms to carry Central to a 3-yard victory.

Goldberg Is Victor.

Central started out by winning the free-style relay. Morris Goldberg, of Central, then sprang a mild upset by winning the 100-yard breast stroke by a foot from Lew Clay, Western flash, but George Reinburg, of Western, retaliated by taking the 50-yard free style from Hooper McQueen by an eyelash. Bob Kelly walked away with the 220 free style for Central, but Andy Moynelo and Bob Dorsey, of Western, placed 1-2 in the 100-yard back stroke in a blanket finish, with Fitzhugh, of Central, third, to make the score 24-24, with three events to go.

At this point Jordan won the century with Jamison, of Central, second, to clinch the meet, but Bob Harding, of Western, won the diving by 2 points from Bill Tarbett, Central No. 1 man, to keep the Georgetowners on the Blue's heels. Central, with Fitzhugh, Goldberg and Jordan, won the medley after Moynelo and Bonham, of Western, had kept pace with Fitzhugh and Goldberg in the breast stroke and back stroke laps, only to have Jordan outspeed G. Reinburg in the free-style lap.

213-yard free-style relay—Won by Central (Ellis Flett, Jamison and Kelly). Time, 2:01.

50-yard free style—Won by G. Reinburg (Western); second, McQueen (Central); third, Brown (Central). Time, 0:28 1-5.

220-yard free style—Won by Kelly (Central); second, Carney (Western); third, Porterfield (Central). Time, 2:49 1-5.

100-yard back stroke—Won by Moynelo (Western); second, Dorsey (Western); third, Fitzhugh (Central). Time, 2:49 1-5.

Low-board diving—Won by Harding (Western), 68.4 points; second Tarbett (Central), 66.4; third, Carney (Western), 56.8.

Youthful Giant To Face Md. U. Fighter

Owings, W. & L., to Weigh 256 Pounds Saturday Against Stalfort.

THE Buddy Baer of collegiate boxing will display his wares at College Park Saturday night when Maryland entertains the ringmen of Washington and Lee. He is Tubby Owings, a broth of a lad tipping the scales at 256 pounds. Naturally, he is a heavyweight without even trying.

Buddy, or rather, Tubby, faces Carl Stalfort, of Maryland, who will be dwarfed by the ponderous tonnage of the Virginian. Stalfort will give away 64 pounds, a large hunk of beef under any circumstances. It is Tubby's first bout, and also Washington and Lee's first match of the season.

The Virginians will present a clever middleweight in Capt. George Short, who helped the Generals win a 4½-3½ decision over Maryland last season by pounding out a clean victory over Jack Herbsleb.

Boxing will wind up a twin bill to be presented by the Terrapins Saturday. Virginia clashes with Coach Burt Shipley's men in basket ball in the first half of the bill. In both events the College Parkers are favorites.

Bill Werber on Air.

Bill Werber, recently acquired by the Boston Red Sox as a third baseman, will be interviewed by Bill Coyle over Station WMAL at 6:30 tonight.

Va. Five Seeks 5th Straight Win Here

UNIVERSITY, Va., Jan. 30 (Spl.).—Virginia's basket ball team, after a week at home, takes to the road again for a game against Maryland in College Park on Saturday evening.

The Cavalier quintet will face the Old Liners with four successive victories behind them over V. M. I., V. P. I., Hampden-Sydney and Randolph-Macon. This gives the Virginians a record for the season of seven wins against five losses, including all games with collegiate rivals.

Coach Gus Tebell has been shifting the Virginia starting line-up from time to time, but now seems to have arrived at a fairly certain combination of starters. Henry Sturm and Orlin Rogers are being used as forwards, with Fred Zeisburg in center and Roy Smith and Harold Gist playing the guards.

Alternate Team.

For an alternate team Coach Tebell has been playing Lucian Cox and Ned Booker in the forward posts, Bud Abbitt at center and Dave Marrett and Bus Male as guards. Sometimes Male is put in forward, with Julian Gordon or Andrew Conner taking his guard position.

Sturm and Zeisberg have been doing most of the goal shooting, but others in the line-up have been scoring frequently enough to give the Cavaliers four successive victories over rivals within the State.

Virginia's boxers have meets with the varsity and freshman teams of V. P. I. on Saturday. But instead of running a double-header with 16 bouts, the freshman match will be started at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and the varsity match at 7:30 that night. The bouts have been separated in order to give time for the final midwinter dance after the varsity bouts.

Curles Neck Hunt Meet Planned for April 6

Richmond, Va., Jan. 30 (AP).—The Deep Run Hunt Club's race committee has applied to the hunts committee of the National Steeplechase and Hunt Association for sanction of a hunt race meeting at Curles Neck, near Richmond, April 6, the regular date.

There had been some talk about extending the meet to two days or deferring the date, but these suggestions did not materialize.

State Amateur Scheduled on Baltimore Course; Add New Feature.

THE Maryland Open championship will be played on a District course next fall and the Maryland State Amateur Tournament will be held on a Baltimore course in June, the Maryland State Golf Association's executive committee decided at a meeting in Baltimore last night.

Although no definite clubs were assigned either of hte two important championships, which are owned by Washington golfers, it is believed that either Kenwood or Congressional will get the open and Five Farms course of the Baltimroe Country Club the amateur. Al Houghton, Keenwood, has won the open three times in a row, and Roger Peacock, Indian Spring, the amateur twice in succession.

Open Trends to Suburban.

Indian Spring already having been awarded the national amateur sectional trials, the Maryland golf leaders, headed by President Nathan Kaufman, were strongly in favor of Suburban, Baltimore, as the scene of the national open trials. No other club, it was understood, had put in a bid for the open event, and the United States Golf Association is expected formally to pass on Suburban in a few days. Suburban is the home club of President Kaufman.

A new feature was added to this year's schedule. It will be an interclub handicap tournament to be run off during the month of May, with competition in three classes—A class—1 to 10 handicaps; B—11 to 21, and C, 22 to 25. The event will be run sectionally to start, with only Washington teams, with four as the minimum and six as the maximum to meet District teams, and Baltimore teams likewise, until one team in each section is left. They will meet in the finals. The Baltimore News is awarding a trophy.

Open Season April 25.

The committee decided to cut down on the number of tournaments. A free handicap tournament will open the schedule on April 25 at Five Farms, and then will follow a handicap event each month. Washington will stage handicap tournaments in May and August, and Baltimore tournaments in June and Baltimore in September.

The support of the District Association will be asked for the staging of the Maryland Open, which the Maryland Association hopes to make a big time event such as Kenwood's National Capital Open.

Record Girls' Entry List Seen In Post's Court Tournament

MISS MAUDE N. PARKER, smiling director of women's activities of the Playgrounds Department, yesterday volunteered the information that a record field would represent the girls' division in the District A. A. U. basket ball tournament which The Washington Post will sponsor at Tech High and Langley Jr. High starting March 4.

There are more than a thousand girls and young women playing in the various department leagues, Miss Parker, who knows the pulse of girls' basketball here better than anyone else, stated.

"I will redouble my efforts this season to bring in more girls' teams in the tournament than heretofore," Miss Parker declared. "There seems to be more interest in the game [illegible] ever b[illegible]."

A number of i[illegible]g ga[illegible] are listed this week in the playgrounds leagues. In the Washington Recreation, Typewriters meet Y. W. C. A. at 7:30 at Central. Miss Emily Harrington captains the Typewriter team and Miss Dorothy Seaton the "Y." Al's A. C., winner of The Post girls' championship last year, was slated to play Takoma tomorrow, but the game has been postponed until February 15.

Sherwood girls will meet Georgetown Saturday at 10 a. m. in the Southwest Armory gym in the Playground Junior series finals. These two teams won their way to the finals by triumphing in sectional tournaments in which 25 teams participated.

Staunton Aims At Unbeaten Ring Year

STAUNTON, Va., Jan. 30 (Spl.).—Under the tutelage of Capt. Joe Taylor, who for 15 years has been producing boxing champions at Staunton Military Academy, the six veteran ringmen who are again representing their school are training hard to accomplish another undefeated season and retain the South Atlantic Prep School Championship.

Capt. Taylor lost only two of his eight regulars, Dick Morse, four times the title holder in the South Atlantic Tournament and now attending Dartmouth, and Woods, last year's heavyweight. In addition, he is developing an ambitious group of youngsters for a second team that will have at least four matches in second team bouts.

Clever Cocaptains.

In Nick DeLiberty and Joe Bunsa, cocaptains of the 1935 team, Capt. Taylor possesses two sure winners in almost any dual meet and opponents to be feared in the tournament. This is DeLiberty's third year at S. M. A. and he was twice runner-up before winning last year's title in the 175-pound class. Bunsa is in his second year at the academy and is the title holder in the 155-pound class. Both DeLiberty and Bunsa were picked as all-State men on S. M. A.'s championship football team this past fall, the former as tackle and the latter as end.

Winston Day, title holder in the 115-pound class, is one of the best bantamweights that Capt. Taylor has produced, and that is a strong statement in view of the fact that very few S. M. A. 115-pounders have ever lost a match. Although he entered the academy three years ago, last year was his first as a regular, and he came through without losing a match for the entire season. Joe McGrael, who is now in his eighth year at the academy, having entered the Junior School in 1927 at the age of 11, is now in his third year on the varsity squad and has been runner-up for the past two years in the tournament.

Howie Improves Rapidly.

Frank Howie first made acquaintance with boxing last year and improved so rapidly that he was runner-up in the 165-pound class in the tournament. He packs a real punch in his right hand and with added experience has good possibilities of realizing his championship hopes this season.

Ed Stanford, hard-hitting featherweight, was eliminated in last year's tournament by Quarles, 125-pounder from A. M. A., whom he had previously defeated in a dual meet. He, too, was a green, first-season man last year, and has improved rapidly since.

Bill Gore, captain-elect of next year's football team, 165-pounder; "Schnozzle" Carver, 145-pounder; Jack Green, 165-pounder and varsity football guard, and Rogerson, powerful heavyweight and tackle in football, are all making strong bids for the vacant positions on the boxing team and will most assuredly see plenty of service in second-team matches, if not on the varsity.

February 2, Duke Freshmen at Staunton and Low Moor High School at Staunton; 8, University of Virginia Freshmen at Staunton; 9, V. M. I. Freshmen at Lexington; 14, W. and L. Freshmen at Staunton; 16, Naval Academy Plebes at Annapolis; 23, Harvard Freshmen at Cambridge. March 1, Augusta at Fort Defiance; 7 and 8, South Atlantic Preparatory School Boxing Tournament at Staunton.

Beall High Sextet Wins League Contest, 27 to 15

Frostburg, Md., Jan. 30 (Spl.).—Coach Agnes Howat's Beall High School girls tightened their grip on first place in the Western Maryland Interscholastic League by handing Pensylvania Avenue High School, of Cumberland, its first defeat of the season here last night by the score of 27 to 15.

The Maroon and White, although minus its stellar forward, Winnie Troutman, who was unable to play on account of illness, led Beall at half time, 11 to 10, but its guards weakened in the final half of the battle and Beall came from behind to win in the fourth quarter.

In the second game of the twin bill, Pensylvania Avenue High School's boys chalked up their fourth consecutive victory of the season over Beall by the score of 35 to 18.

Woodstock, Va., Jan. 30 (Spl.).—W. O. Riley, former star athlete of Lynchburg College, was named president of the Shamrock Athletic Club, following a meeting of the board of directors here today. Boyd Ramey, well-known figure in local sporting circles, was elected vice president, and Clarence Golliday, secretary-treasurer.

The board discussed plans for an athletic show here early in February, when championships for Shenandoah County will be awarded in boxing and wrestling. Other business discussed by the board was the selecting of a clubroom and drawing up of by-laws.

A basket ball team to represent the local club will be formed in the near future, and will be coached by former college stars. It was further pointed out by the directors that the rumor that the local club was opposed to baseball was untrue.

Massanutten Defeats New York Swimmers

Woodstock, Va., Jan. 30 (Spl.).—The Massanutten Cadet swimmers splashed their way to a 34-32 victory over the Far Rockaway High School, of New York here last night in one of the fastest meets ever staged in the local pool. The visitors led throughout the meet, only to lose, due to Massanutten winning the relay, which marked the last event of the evening.

Capt. Hydowitz, of the local tankmen, was the outstanding performer of the evening, winning both the 100 and 220-yard swims with ease, while Adams, Far Rockaway's diving ace, who holds the State championship in New York, displayed some of the best form ever seen on the local board.

100-yard free style—Won by Hydowitz (Massanutten); second, Noasacki (Massanutten); third, Zinn (F. R.). Time, 1:04.

W. & L. Signs Tilson Through 1938 Season

Lexington, Va., Jan. 30 (AP).—Washington and Lee University athletic officials announced today that Football Coach Warren E. Tilson had signed a new contract to run through the 1938 season. His present contract expires at the end of the 1935 season.

Tilson came to Washington and Lee as an assistant in 1931 and was appointed head coach after two years. Next year will be his third as Washington and Lee football mentor.

Tortue Troupe On Mat Here Tonight

A COLLECTION of the roughest wrestling talent extant will erupt tonight at the Auditorium on the all-brawl program of hulk heaving scheduled for the benefit of the exceptionally bloodthirsty and Promoter Joe Turner's pocketbook.

Ranked No. 1 among the public enemies will be George Zaharias and Little Beaver, who will meet in the two out of three fall two-hour time limit feature. Heretofore pitching his tepee here only briefly in preliminaries, in which he has been undefeated, the Indian stalwart has vowed he will enter the ring full of vim, vigor and vitality against Zaharias.

Zaharias, a roughhouser of proven main-bout caliber, an expert both at administering punishment and absorbing it, will ask no quarter, nor give any. In fact, he won't even ask or give as much as a plugged nickel.

Karl Pojello, the lithe Lithuanian dancing master who performs in long black tights instead of a ballet skirt, will participate in the semi-final against Gino Garibaldi, the gallery gods' delight. Gino is the ne plus ultra, or something, in aggressiveness while Pojello generally is rated one of the cleverest "straight" wrestlers in the business.

Frank Brunowicz, another big bad mans, will take part in a 30-minute time limit affair against Andy Rascher, one of the rasher wrestlers. In another 30-minute exhibition, Ed Meske, the perfect villain, will endeavor to separate Scotty McDougall from his kilts.

In accordance with an old Turner custom, ladies accompanied by paying male escorts will be admitted free.

Wheat Values BoundUpward; Close at Peaks

Cotton Is Quiet and Steady; General Market Up 4 to 7 Points.

Chicago, Jan. 30 (AP). — Briskly bounding upward late today, grain values showed themselves responsive to fresh Washington proposals looking toward currency inflation.

Most traders construed suggested inflationary moves as bullish regarding grains. Considerable notice, too, was taken of strong belief expressed in some quarters that the forthcoming decision of the United States Supreme Court would sustain congressional abrogating of gold-clause contracts.

Wheat closed springy at almost the day's top figures, ¾ to 1¼ cents a bushel higher than yesterday's finish, May 96⅛@96¼; corn ¾ to 1⅛ up, May 83½@83⅝; oats at ⅝ to 1 cent gain, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 22 cents.

Aside from monetary factors, the wheat market right from start displayed an upward trend that trade leaders said was indicative of an oversold condition and of a natural recovery. Houses with Eastern connections took the lead in purchasing that soon developed, and there was also considerable futures buying on the part of cash interests here.

Some of the buying was based more or less on the fact that Liverpool reported better demand for wheat abroad and also on reports of crop damage to domestic winter wheat Southwest.

Cotton Market

New York, Jan. 30 (AP).—Cotton was quiet and steady today with prices showing slight advances on trade buying and covering. The market closed steady at net advances of 4 to 7 points.

Reports on the cotton hearings before the Senate Agricultural Committee were followed with interest but they failed to stimulate trading interest.

Exports today, 24,193, making 2,949,680 so far this season. Port receipts, 5,580. United States port stocks, 2,873,196.

Cottonseed Oil.

Bleachable cottonseed oil was firm today, closing 9 to 12 points net higher on a turnover of only 16 contracts. Wool Futures Drop Sharply In Past Week

New York, Jan. 30.—Prices of wool top futures on the New York Wool Top Exchange registered a rather sharp decline during the past week. After a slight rise early in the week, prices declined steadily and at the close of trading on Friday, they showed a net decline of 18 to 30 points from the previous week's close. The greatest recessions were on the nearby months. The spot price of the Exchange Standard Certificated Top declined 20 points during the week, from 84.0 to 82.0 cents.

Prices in foreign markets also showed a decline during the week. At Antwerp, futures were down three-eighths to half a penny, while at Roubaix, they were off 20 to 30 centimes. Bradford spot quotations were unchanged to down three-quarters of a penny from the close of a week ago.

Wool Market.

Boston, Jan. 30 (AP).—(U. S. Department of Agriculture.)—The wool market here continued to be only moderately active, but inquiries were fairly numerous, especially for the finer Western-grown wools. Some mills appear to consider now a fair quantity of business on the average and short combing 64s and finer territory wools in original bag, but there was apparently no demand for graded fleeces, strictly combing 64s and finer territory wools at this time.

Sales of Bed Linen Are Active.

New York, Jan. 30 (AP). — The large volume of January retail sales in sheets and pillowcases has prompted heavy replacement buying and mill inventories have been substantially reduced, according to textile quarters.

Finance, Business, Economics

Rising Trend in Bank Deposits Is Cited as Significant Indication of the Course of Business as Well as the Popular Attitude.

(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

New York, Jan. 30.—One very significant indication of the course of business, as well as the psychological attitude of the population, has been the rising trend in the velocity of turnover of bank deposits in recent weeks.

During the first three weeks of January, the Federal Reserve Board reports, debits by banks to individual deposit accounts were almost 18 per cent greater than during the corresponding period a year ago. This increase, furthermore, was spread relatively evenly throughout the country.

During the deflation period, the velocity of turnover of bank deposits declined far more sharply than did their total amount. In other words, the depression was marked not so much by an elimination of bank deposits, through bank liquidation or suspension, but rather by a tendency for depositors to use their deposits actively. One dollar of a bank deposit turned over ten times, for example, has about the same influence on general business as $10 turned over but once in the course of a year.

The past two years have witnessed a sharp increase in the total of bank deposits, chiefly because of the sale of Government bonds to the banks by the Treasury, which then spent the proceeds and thus turned over their newly created deposits to private persons. During 1934 alone, preliminary data indicate, deposits of all commercial banks in the United States increased by some $4,000,000,000. However, the average velocity of turnover of deposits declined moderately during the year, so that the expansion in the amount was offset in large part by reduced average turnover activity.

Hesitancy in Using Funds Has Adverse Effect on Business.

Hesitation on the part of bank depositors to utilize their funds, because of the various uncertainties of the times, thus explains why an expanding volume of bank deposits has failed to stimulate a corresponding increase in the rate of business activity. This experience has emphasized the fact that merely making available new purchasing power does not of itself assure more active business. There must also be a willingness, based on confidence in the future, on the part of those who control this purchasing power actually to use it for productive or consumption purposes.

The Federal Reserve Bank of New York compiles each month an index of velocity of bank deposits, based on the relation of the total of debits to individual accounts reported by the banks to their demand deposits. This index stood at 164 per cent of its 1919-1925 average in 1929, the year when velocity of turnover of bank deposits reached a peak. The velocity ratio declined to 69 per cent of the 1919-1925 average in 1932, at the bottom of the deflation. It declined further to 67 per cent in 1933, as the total of deposits began to increase again, but depositors hesitated to use their funds any more actively. During 1934, the velocity of deposits ratio declined further to 63 per cent of the 1919-1925 average, a new low.

A clearer picture of the decline in the velocity of turnover of bank deposits, in the face of an increase in their amount, is furnished when we leave out New York City figures, since financial operations connected with Government and other financing have tended to keep up the ratio here. Banks outside of New York City showed a velocity ratio during 1934 only 50 per cent of the 1919-1925 average.

The month of November witnessed almost the lowest point in the average velocity of turnover of bank deposits on record, according to the data compiled by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. With the revival of industrial activity, especially in the automobile and related industries, during December, bank deposits began to be turned over more rapidly. The velocity ratio compiled by the Reserve Bank, covering 141 cities throughout the country, rose from 54 in November to 60 in December. This rise of 11 per cent in the ratio was one of the sharpest reported between two consecutive months since these statistics were first compiled in 1919.

During January, the trend remained distinctly upward. The Federal Reserve Board, reporting now for a larger number of cities, showed a rise in debits to individual accounts of 13 per cent over 1934 in the first week of this year, 23 per cent in the second week and 17 per cent in the third week. The increased rate of industrial activity and the continued relatively high volume of retail sales chiefly explain this more active turnover in bank deposits.

It has frequently been pointed out in recent months that this country has undergone a substantial "inflation" of bank credit, but that this inflation has been without major effect because the increased deposit total has not been put to active use. The rapidly rising trend in the total of bank debits to individual accounts during the past two months may indicate a vital change in this trend.

If we have really arrived at a point where popular confidence is being restored and people are willing to use the vast mass of new deposits created by purchases of Government bonds by the commercial banks, then our problems will rapidly become one of controlling, rather than stimulating, an expansion of bank credit. In that event, it would become urgent to reform the existing system of bank reserves by basing requirements upon the velocity of turnover, as well as the amount, of bank deposits.

Bond Market Still Hesitant On Gold Case

Prices Yield in Mixed Trading; Sales Drop to $10,356,000.

New York, Jan. 30 (AP).—The bond market remained in a narrow trading area today as investors sought the sidelines in greater number to await the Supreme Court's decision in the gold clause cases.

Government loans yielded still further ground under light offerings, and, with some exceptions, corporate issues followed the same trend. Trading was the smallest in two weeks, aggregating $10,356,000, par value, compared with $11,208,000 on Tuesday.

Constant shifting from one group to another, especially in the class of bonds likely to be most affected, was seen in the criss-cross movements of loans of the same corporation.

Shifting Causes Irregularity.

Typical of this were American Telephone debenture 5s, up one-eighth at 113⅛, and the Sinking Fund 5s of 1960, off one-fourth at 112½. Other issues moving in this manner included obligations of Consolidated Gas, Great Northern Railroad, Illinois Central, Louisville & Nashville, and Southern Pacific.

Federal Light & Traction 6s were bid up 3 points to 88 and three other issues of the company were 1 to 2½ higher, although there were no reports directly affecting the company. Other utilities showing slight improvement included Illinois Bell Telephone 5s, Laclede Gas Light 5s, Montana Power 5s and Pacific Telephone 5s.

The Associated Press averages for 10 utilities advanced .25 of a point to 87.87, but that for 20 rails declined .26 of a point to 85.76 and that for 10 industrials was .10 of a point lower at 94.89.

Federal Issues Lower.

United States Treasury issues were generally 1-32d to 4-32ds lower, but the Libertys were fairly steady and Home Owners Loan bonds were only slightly changed. Federal Farm Mortgage 3¼s were 2-32ds higher at 102.19. Trading was again extremely light in Government bonds.

The foreign section was generally quiet although there was a flurry of activity in South American issues, especially Buenos Aires 6½s, which gained 1⅞ points at 58⅞.

Steel Output Jumps to Peak Of 56 Per Cent

Week's Gain Is Placed at 4½ Points by Iron Age Summary.

New York, Jan. 30 (AP).—Steel production has attained a new peak, at 56 per cent of capacity, said Iron Age today in its weekly summary. This is a gain of 4½ points over last week's ratio and is the highest rate since last June.

"There is as yet little disposition to look for an early recession in steel works operations," asserted the review, "although it is conceded that further gains may not carry output more than 5 to 10 points higher.

"This year there has been much less speculative buying of iron and steel than a year ago. Moreover, the automobile makers, as well as the farm equipment industry and various miscellaneous lines of manufacture, are apparently headed for the highest operations in four or five years.

"Steel output is up 6 points to 42 per cent at Pittsburgh, 8 points to 67 per cent at Chicago, 1 point to 36 per cent in the Philadelphia district, 3 points to 46 per cent at Buffalo, 24 points to 100 per cent at Detroit and 4 points to 29 per cent in the South. Operations are unchanged at 95 per cent in the Wheeling district, 63 per cent in the valleys and 67 per cent in the Cleveland-Lorain area.

"After remaining stationary for three weeks, the Iron Age composite price for scrap steel was lowered this week to $12.17 a ton from $12.33. The finished steel and pig iron averages were unchanged."

Industrial Activity and Prices Advance, Reserve Board Says

Wholesale prices of farm products and foods showed a considerable advance in the latter part of the month and in the early part of January, while prices of other commodities as a group showed little change.

Output of basis industrial products increased in December, when it usually declines, and the Federal Reserve Board's index, which makes allowance for the usual seasonal variations, increased from 74 per cent of the 1923-25 average in November to 85 per cent in December.

Steel Activity Increases.

Activity at steel mills increased, contrary to the usual seasonal tendency, and output at automobile factories rose rapidly. In both of these industries there were further sharp increases in activity in the first three weeks of January.

At woolen mills and silk mills activity increased in December, contrary to seasonal tendency, and at cotton mills and tobacco factories it declined by less than the usual seasonal amount. Output of petroleum increased somewhat in December and the first half of January.

Factory employment increased between the middle of November and the middle of December, contrary to seasonal tendency, and there was a considerable growth in factory pay rolls. Substantial increases were reported for the automobile, textile, shoe and tire industries, while in the meat-packing industry there was a further decline from recent high levels. Employment in retail trade showed an increase, largely of a seasonal character.

Construction Values Drop.

Value of construction contracts awarded, as reported by the F. W. Dodge Corporation, showed a decline in December, partly seasonal in nature, followed by an increase in the first half of January.

For the fourth quarter as a whole the value of contracts for privately-financed projects was about the same as in the corresponding period of 1933, while the volume of publicly-financed projects was considerably smaller than last year.

Volume of freight car loadings declined less in December than is usual at that season. Sales of merchandise by department stores showed an increase of more than the estimated seasonal amount and were approximately 11 per cent larger than in the corresponding month a year earlier.

Commodity Prices Advance.

The general level of wholesale commodity prices, as measured by the index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, advanced considerably during the latter part of December and the early part of January, reflecting marked increases in the prices of farm products and foods.

Scrap steel prices also increased. In the third week of January prices of grains, cotton, hides and rubber showed a decline from the level of the preceding week. Currently wholesale prices are 9 per cent higher than a year ago, reflecting an increase of 30 per cent for farm products, an increase of 24 per cent for foods and little change for other commodities.

Retail prices of foods, as reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, increased considerably in the latter part of December, following three months of gradual decline.

Bank Balances Increase.

During the six weeks ending January 23, seasonal return flow of currency from circulation, further imports of gold, and disbursement by the Treasury of funds previously held as cash or on deposit with the Reserve banks were reflected in a growth of member bank balances with the Reserve banks to $4,500,000,000, the highest figure on record and in an increase of their excess reserves to the high level of $2,160,000,000.

Loans and investments of reporting member banks in leading cities increased by $350,000,000 in the five weeks ended January 16.

Holdings of United States Government obligations rose $420,000,000 and an increase was shown also in holdings of obligations guaranteed by the Government and in other security holdings, while loans declined by $130,000,000.

Commercial Paper Rates.

Commercial paper rates, which had been reported at a range of ¾-1 per cent since June, declined to a general level of ¾ per cent early in January. Other short-term open market money rates showed little change, while yields on long-term United States Treasury bonds declined from 3 to 2¾ per cent.

In December and January discount rates were lowered from 3 to 2½ per cent at the Federal Reserve Banks of Richmond, Minneapolis, Kansas City and Dallas, and from 2½ to 2 per cent at Philadelphia, Chicago and St. Louis.

At the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta the discount rate was lowered to 2½ per cent in December and to 2 per cent in January.

Foreign Markets.

(Associated Press.)

London—Affected by exchange-rate uncertainty and trouble in the commodity markets, prices eased on the stock exchange today in a dull session. Gilt-edged securities and new issues declined on profit taking, while German bonds and gold-mining shares hardened in the afternoon. The market closed easy.

Paris—The steadying of the pound sterling and the American dollar restored normal trading on the bourse today. Rentes advanced slightly, while international issues were firm. The closing was barely steady.

Berlin—A flurry of buying orders caused prices to open firm on the boerse today. Slight declines were recorded later, which were recovered partially near the quiet closing.

Closed Bank Receivers Lose Stock Levy Suit

Pepco and W. R. & E. Co. Vote Dividend on Common and Preferred.

By Karl von Lewinski.

A clause in the charter of the Potomac Savings Bank expressly providing that its stock be "non-assessable" frees stockholders of liability for a 100 per cent stock assessment on their holding, according to a ruling by District Supreme Court Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue yesterday.

HAMILTON.

The opinion was returned in a suit brought by Norman Hamilton, receiver of the bank, to collect a $40,880 levy on the 2,044 shares of stock in the Potomac held by the estate of the late George W. Offutt, father of the chairman of the Alcohol Beverage Control Board.

Charles V. Imlay and Ross H. Snyder, attorneys for the estate, contended the laws of Virginia, where the bank was chartered, did not provide for such an assessment and they contended that even if the bank did operate wholly within the District it could not be held to be operating under Federal law, which does provide for such assessments.

No Virginia Provision.

The bank's receiver admitted there was no provision in the Virginia code regarding the assessment, but he claimed that since the bank did business only in the District it should be governed by the Federal banking law.

Mr. Hamilton indicated he would appeal the decision to the United States Court of Appeals.

He also stated that all funds that had already been paid by assessed stockholders were being held under earmark pending the appeal.

Pepco and Railway Dividend.

Directors of the Potomac Electric Power Co. have declared the regular quarterly dividend of $1.37½ per share on the corporation's 5½ per cent preferred stock, payable March 1 to stockholders of record February 15. The board has also voted the usual quarterly dividend of $1.50 per share on the 6 per cent preferred stock, this, too, being payable March 1 to stock of record February 15.

Directors of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. have declared their quarterly dividend of $3 per share on the common stock, the payment being due March 1 to shareholders of record February 16. At the time the board voted the regular quarterly dividend of $1.25 a share on the company's preferred stock for the present quarter and also for the second quarter.

The first Railway & Electric payment is due March 1 to shareholders of record February 16, while the second disbursement will be made on June 1 to holders of record May 15.

Washington Railway & Electric common stock has been on a 12 per cent basis for some time after paying 7 per cent over a long period. In 1934 the stock paid $1.75 in the first quarter, then went on the higher basis. With the declaration of a special $20 dividend last March, the stock paid a total of $30.75 during the full year.

New Jersey Mutual Report.

Indications of the striking improvement in the financial condition of the American people are given in the ninetieth annual report of the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co. of New Jersey, preliminary figures of which have been released for the ninetieth anniversary of the company's chartering on January 30, 1845.

Disbursement for policies surrendered, which were high in 1933 on account of financial distress among policyholders, decreased $17,500,000 last year. Total policy loans outstanding at the end of 1934 were down $13,000,000 from the previous year.

The company's cash on hand at the beginning of this year totals $14,652,000, over double the corresponding figure for the previous year, while Government bonds held now total $18,680,000, as compared with $10,180,000 the previous year.

Insurance expenses including taxes, reduced over $800,000 to $9,000,321; total admitted assets increased $915,000 to $570,437,727; while surplus increased during the year $718,000 to $30,269,528.

The tendency of insureds and beneficiaries to leave their funds with the company on income basis is indicated by the fact that out of $25,250,000 of death claims and matured endowments in 1934, $8,632,000 was left with the company drawing interest or else to be paid out in installments over one or more lifetimes or over a specified number of years.

Another Slump.

This slump of ours is nothing new, there have been slumps before; and England, after Waterloo, was weary, sick and sore. When that great victory was won, o'erjoyed the people stood; an era new was now begun, with peace and all things good. Napoleon was an also ran, who long had been a threat; the British put him in a can, his projects were all wet. So Britain sheathed her sword and thought her troubles were all done, her plans worked out, her battles fought, her crown of glory won. Her soldiers brave came marching home, intent on milder chores, they'd prune the trees and plow the loam and work in hardware stores. But they were disappointed then, theirs was a grievous plight, for there were forty-seven men for every job in sight. The land was full of unemployed, for whom disaster yawned, their stomachs were an aching void, their dinner pails were pawned. The towns were full of misery, the country full of woe, the children were a sight to see, bare-footed in the snow. The sad-eyed, haggard women looked in vain through shelves and bins, for there was nothing to be cooked, to feed the starving twins. That slump went on for years and years, and left the heartstrings numb, while weary people voiced their fears that worse things were to come. But all these troubles passed away, with grief and wail and groan, and Britain, dominant and gay, reached heights she's never known.

'Shortcomings' In Works Cited By Contractors

Recommendations Adopted by Conference Propose to Correct Faults.

Wage and hour regulations, practices under NRA codes and virtually every phase of the construction industry's connection with public works met a cross-fire of criticism from the Associated General Contractors of America in closing sessions of its annual convention here yesterday.

The convention adopted a report drafted by a special committee listing "shortcomings" of past public works construction policies and recommending practices which it instructed its permanent Washington staff to urge upon Congress and the Administration. These were the "shortcomings:"

"The usual supervisory agencies of construction scattered over the country, familiar with and in touch with local needs were ignored."

Because "details of contract work were directed and administered from a central bureau" the "resulting delay" made it necessary to organize CWA and "this resulted in the financing of depression rather than recovery."

The Recommendations.

These were the recommendations: Utilization of every established and proved agency of construction in the Federal Government and political subdivisions "to obtain speed."

In addition the convention adopted 11 resolutions touching for the most part upon the proposed works program. One resolution hit back at mandatory 30-hour week proposals. Another favored the substitution of a 40-hour maximum. A third asked amendment of PWA regulations to allow contractors to select skilled and intermediate labor "from whatever source we may elect."

Other Resolutions.

Other resolutions asked the NIRB to halt voiding of subcontractors' bids by code authorities, proposed decentralization of all governmental agencies having to do with "predetermination of wages," and requested the Federal Housing Administration to prepare a plan for adjustment of bonds.

The gloom of previous convention sessions was dispelled somewhat when Maj. Gen. Edward M. Markham, chief of Army engineers, disclosed that the volume of contractural work supervised by his office has increased from 33 to 62.8 per cent of the Army total in the last eight years.

Speaking in the place of Rear Admiral C. J. Peoples, director of procurement in the Treasury Department, W. E. Reynolds, head of the public works section of the division, told the contractors that from his experience the better way to handle public construction was by private contract.

The convention reelected Nick F. Helmers, of St. Paul, as national president and A. W. Merchant, of Providence, as vice president. At a banquet last night it listened to speeches by George L. Berry, NRA division administrator; Stephen F. Vorhees, chairman of the Construction Code Authority, and J. M. Fitzgerald, railroad public relations official.

Fish Asks Easier Deportation.

On the Air Today

By Katherine Smith.

A RATHER hefty report came in the mail from C. B. S. this morning. The first paragraph says: "The most ambitious educational radio program ever conceived is being arranged for presentation over WABC-Columbia network on Monday, March 4, the second anniversary of the inauguration of President Roosevelt," etc., etc., etc.

Here is the plan, still tentative: Technically, 45 microphones, 18 amplifiers, 30 pick-up points, over 100 miles of wire and a dozen announcers will be used. The personnel of the program is (so far) WJSV staff and Bob Trout, presidential announcer; Edwin C. Hill, Boake Carter and H. V. Kaltenborn, and a whole collection of Government officials. Audiences will hear a review of the first two years of the New Deal, a first-hand account of current problems facing the three branches of the Government—executive, legislative and judicial.

In order to carry this all out, dramatizations of governmental activities will be heard, then the scene will be shifted to the actual participant, who will have a chance to explain the dramatic act, and add his (or her) own bit about the responsibilities of the office.

Another bit of mail came from the Radio Institute of Audible Arts. Several booklets of recommended radio programs accompanied a release to the effect that the institute is taking upon itself the job of separating the chaf from the grain—or something.

For instance, today's recommended net-work programs are:

All of which is very informative, but the institute neglects to select programs that make you laugh when you're tired of thinking, programs that help you to relax when you're worked hard all day.

Dialing details: Fred Waring gives a preview of music from the new picture, "Gold-Diggers of 1935" . . . Egon Petri, Dutch pianist, plays two solos and the B minor Quintet by Florent-Schmitt on the N. B. C. Music Guild. The Gordon String Quartet will be heard with Mr. Petri . . . Dwight Meade reads poetry on the "Gems of Melody," 7:15, WMAL. . . . Helen Jepson, newest of the Metropolitan stars, will be with Paul Whiteman . . . Spitalny features a medley of tunes by women composers on the "Hour of Charm."

Speeches: T. E. Brown, director of vocational education of North Carolina, says, "The Farm Boy Asks a Question." WRC, 6:15 . . . G. W. U. Forum presents Prof. David H. Howard on "Chemistry in the Advance of Civilization." WMAL, 8:30 . . . Economics program presents Leverett S. Lyon, of the Brookings Institute, and Paul T. Homan, of Cornell, on "Self-Government in Business" . . . On WJSV, Maj. Henry H. Curran speaks on "Recovery in 1935," at 11:30 p. m. At 7 p. m. Malcolm Muir tells you what he thinks of the "Thirty-Hour Week," WRC.

Sporting news: Arch McDonald presents "Torchy" Peden, the bicycle rider, at 6:15 p. m. today, WJSV. And at 6:30, WMAL, Bill Coyle introduces Bill Werber, of the Boston Red Sox.

Extra NBC news: A new network serial starts Monday, the "Black Chamber," to go on WRC on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays . . . "One Man's Family" shifts to Wednesday, February 6, then starts its regular spot on February 10 for Sunday hearings . . . Easy Aces starts for WRC on Monday night, 7:30.

Adkins Dismisses Suit Against Labor Board

The National Labor Relations Board, named as one of the defendants in a suit brought by the Ely Walker Co., of St. Louis, to restrain the lifting of the company's Blue Eagle, won a victory in the District Supreme Court yesterday, when Justice Jesse C. Adkins dismissed the suit as to it.

The board, it was shown, had investigated a labor complaint and had sent its report to the Compliance Division of the NRA for appropriate action.

Justice Adkins held that since the Labor Board has completed its function, it was not properly a party defendant. The suit as to the other defendants was permitted to stand.
